PREFACE

The Maryland Council of Defense on September 18, 1918, appointed George L. Radcliffe as chairman of a Historical Division for the compilation of historical records of Maryland's part in the World War. The war-time Governor of Maryland, Emerson C. Harrington, and the chairman of the Maryland Council of Defense, Francis E. Waters, were deeply interested in the historical project and gave it their hearty support. Mr. Radcliffe, a historical scholar and an officer of the Maryland Historical Society as well as a successful business man, planned the undertaking in a comprehensive way. An office was opened on January 1, 1919, in charge of Karl Singewald as secretary, who has directed the work throughout. In May, 1919, the office was moved from the Fidelity Building to the Maryland Historical Society Building.

Mr. Radcliffe invited to a dinner at the Maryland Club, on February 16, 1919, about twenty-five persons who had taken a leading part in the war activities. The historical undertaking was heartily endorsed and those present consented to serve as an advisory committee to assist along various lines.

Under Chapter 92, Acts of 1920, the War Records Commission was appointed by Governor Ritchie to carry forward the historical work upon dissolution of the Maryland Council of Defense. The original appointees were: Stuart S. Janney, chairman, then commander of the Department of Maryland, American Legion; George L. Radcliffe; Van Lear Black; Harvey B. Stone; Philip C. McIntyre. Messrs. Janney, McIntyre and Dr. Stone served as officers in the U. S. Army during the World War, and Messrs. Radcliffe and Black took a leading part in war activities at home. The first meeting of the War Records Commission was held on May 17, 1920. In 1921, Charles F. Macklin, then commander of the Department of Maryland, American Legion, was appointed in place of Philip C. McIntyre, who had failed to qualify. The only subsequent change in the personnel of the Commission was by the death of Mr. Black in 1930.

Beginning in June, 1919, steps were taken to organize historical committees in the several counties of the State. This was taken up through the war-time organization of the Maryland Council of Defense and of the Women's Section. In nearly all of the counties, chairmen were appointed in charge of the historical work and in some instances these chairmen formed county committees and even district committees. In the summer of 1920, visits were made to the several counties for the purpose of stimulating the work and of forming a more effective organization where necessary. In several counties, the historical work was ably and successfully carried out, but in most of the counties the results were meagre. The county committees maintained more or less activity for two or three years.

The Historical Division undertook a comprehensive program for the compilation of the war records. The program as outlined was submitted to and approved by an advisory committee of historians, composed of Dr. John M. Vincent, Dr.

John H. Latane, and Dr. Bernard C. Steiner. The program covered both military and civilian war activities.

The index of civilian agencies and activities contains several hundred subjects. It covers organizations of all kinds that were engaged in war activities, including especially the important governmental agencies, as well as non-governmental patriotic, welfare and relief agencies, war industries located in Maryland, and numerous other subjects. The records include the complete files of several war-time organizations, reports and other publications of the war period, publicity matter such as pamphlets and posters, scrap-books of newspaper clippings, photographs and other interesting exhibits, and special histories and reports of war work in Maryland. The method of collecting these records was largely by letter and questionnaire, followed up by personal contact in the more important instances. Individual records, also, were compiled of persons who performed war service above the ordinary in a civilian capacity.

Aside from the individual service records, the military records cover principally the military units composed in large part of Marylanders and the military and naval establishments located in Maryland. The military units in which Maryland is particularly interested number over fifty. Valuable records were gathered relating to these units, including histories, rosters, original documents, diaries and narratives, maps, photographs. It may be mentioned, also, that a library was collected, containing nearly two hundred published histories of organization units of the American Army in the World War. An exceptionally large number of important military and naval establishments were located in Maryland. A great deal of material was gathered relating to the various establishments, which numbered altogether about fifty, including histories, construction and utilities reports, camp publications, photographs.

The compilation of the individual records of military and naval service falls into two periods—namely, before and after the receipt of the official cards from Washington. The first efforts were devoted to compiling an index of Marylanders who died in the service, using the official casualty reports, newspaper files and other sources. This index was utilized by the Maryland Council of Defense in issuing certificates of appreciation to the families.

In the summer of 1919, a general campaign was instituted for the records of all Marylanders who served in the war. The campaign was inaugurated on August 16 by proclamation of the Governor, published in all newspapers in the State. Printed forms were distributed at convenient places in Baltimore City and through the historical committees in the counties. In November, 1919, the Police Department of Baltimore City cooperated by making a census of World War veterans. The census books were checked as to records already received and then returned to the police with a supply of forms for use in obtaining additional records. This canvass by the police added nearly 8,000 records. The efforts to obtain the records were continued more or less actively for two or three years by the county committees, with the cooperation of the American Legion. Altogether, nearly 30,000 records of Maryland veterans were obtained.

In the meantime, a general index was compiled from available sources, including the records received in the campaign, Maryland National Guard rosters, induction lists of the Maryland local boards, lists furnished by the Navy and Marine Corps recruiting offices, Army and Navy registers, newspaper files, et cetera.

In July, 1921, an arrangement was made with the Adjutant General of Maryland for loan to the War Records Commission of the official statement of service cards received from Washington. These cards, containing condensed statements of World War service in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, respectively, were furnished to the several States pursuant to Act of Congress. The work of furnishing these cards was substantially completed by the end of the calendar year 1922. The cards for officers of the Regular Army and of the Reserve Corps were lacking in essential data and it was necessary to return them to the War Department for revision. For a large percentage of members of the Maryland National Guard, it was necessary to obtain from the Adjutant General of Maryland additional data from the records prior to muster into Federal service. The Navy cards, also, were deficient in several important respects and had to be returned for revision.

The work of preparing the records for publication was started early in 1922. The official cards were of course used as the basis, checking them with the records filled out by the veterans themselves and with other available information. Unfortunately, the official cards were found to be extremely faulty—full of errors and discrepancies, and lacking in uniformity. These cards, totaling four and a half million for the Army, were prepared in rather hasty fashion before the War Department records were in proper shape for the purpose. A vast amount of excellent work has been done by the War Department on its own initiative in correcting the records. It has not been feasible, however, to undertake a general revision of the records, although recognized by the War Department as necessary.

The work on the Maryland records was a huge task, multiplied greatly by the faulty condition of the official cards. For an intelligent handling of the records, it was necessary to acquire a wide range of information on Army and Navy subjects and especially on World War matters. In checking the records, a great deal of reference material was utilized, including city and telephone directories, atlases, Army and Navy registers, Maryland National Guard rosters, induction lists of the Maryland local boards, rosters of military units, newspaper clippings, et cetera.

In checking the records, lists of questions were made up in cases of patent errors or discrepancies on the official cards, or of differences between the data on the official cards and the records filled out by the veterans. The questions covered only material items, since it was necessary as a practical matter to pass over slight discrepancies. These lists were then sent to the War Department, Navy Department and Marine Corps, respectively, for investigation. A vast number of letters, also, were written to Washington on special cases. This work involved also the writing of thousands of letters to the veterans in efforts to straighten out the records. This often required in a single case several letters back and forth to the War Department and to the veteran in order to settle an important item. This correspondence with the veterans was handicapped by ignorance or indifference in many cases and by the great difficulty in connection with addresses. Since the year 1925, it has been possible in most cases to obtain from the departments in

The data of combat engagements as originally entered on the cards was so very incomplete and unreliable that it was decided not to use this item in publishing the records. The combat engagements of organization units that served in the American Expeditionary Forces were subsequently reviewed and determined by a board of officers. The officer-in-charge of the World War Division of the Adjutant General's Office thereupon stated that it was now possible to furnish a correct statement of combat engagements for the individual records. At a meeting in November, 1927, the War Records Commission decided to secure this data for the Maryland records. This entailed forwarding to the War Department all cards showing overseas service, numbering about 30,000. The cards when returned showed a multitude of corrections of other items, as well as the combat engagements. The item of combat engagements presented great difficulty, since it was necessary to show the soldier's special assignments where the combat engagements on his individual record differed from the combat engagements of his regular organization. This matter of combat engagements greatly prolonged the work on the records.

The general index contained six or seven thousand names for which no official cards were received. Lists of these names were sent to Washington for checking. A large majority of these cases were thus eliminated, being reported "not found" or merely variations in spelling. A large part, also, were reported as credited to other States. As a result of these lists, however, several hundred cards were received which had been sent to other States by mistake. The "border-line" cases are deserving of special mention. In checking the official cards sent to Maryland, many cases were found where post-office address close to the State line in Maryland, but where inducted by the local board of the bordering county in the adjoining State. In such cases, it was ascertained if the actual place of residence was across the line in the adjoining State, although post-office in Maryland. The War Department was persuaded to take cognizance of cases of this kind and to transfer the cards to the States of actual residence. This was subsequently used conversely in securing transfer to Maryland of two or three hundred cases that were reported as credited to the adjoining States. The War Department, in distributing the World War records to the States, has rigidly adhered to the rule of following the residence address as given by the soldier at the time of entering the service. In many cases, the addresses as shown on the records in no wise represent the true facts as to residence. The War Department, however, has maintained an inflexible attitude in refusing to accept evidence of the true residence address. The Navy Department has followed a more liberal policy, transferring the records upon satisfactory evidence.

The records are still very far from perfect. The correction of the records by the departments in Washington will continue indefinitely. The work of the War Records Commission has necessarily been limited to the correction of errors that were disclosed by available means of checking. The total results, however, in improving the Maryland records are of immense value. In a vast number of instances, the records have been corrected in important items such as names, grades of rank, organizations, combat engagements, wounds, citations, et cetera. In large part, these corrections would never have been made, if not done at this time while it was yet possible to communicate with the veterans and to obtain evidence from them. The main purpose in publishing the records at this time is to make them readily available and to afford further opportunity for correction.

The present volumes contain the records of service in the U. S. Army, Navy and Marine Corps. The Commission's files contain also records of service of Marylanders in the military and naval forces of the Allied nations, but these records are incomplete and largely unofficial, and are therefore not included herein. The Commission does not plan any further publications.

The Introduction herein comprises two parts: (1) a review of American military and naval participation in the World War and brief histories of the military units composed largely of Marylanders; (2) a glossary of information upon military and naval subjects such as enlistment, discharge, grades of rank, et cetera. This introductory material has an independent value and at the same time serves as a background for the individual service records. It is compiled almost entirely from secondary sources, with very little original research, but involving an extensive task in its preparation. The histories of the various military units were submitted in most instances to the respective commanding officers for criticism. Special mention should be made of the summaries and maps prepared by the American Battle Monuments Commission, covering operations of the 29th and 79th Divisions in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive. This material, although not yet in final form for publication by that Commission, was made available for our use in the fall of 1932, and was found to be so far superior to any material previously in hand that it was utilized as the basis for a complete revision of the chapters herein on the 29th and 79th Divisions. The American Battle Monuments Commission, however, is not responsible for these chapters in their entirety, since other sources also were utilized in their preparation.

The continuance of the work of the War Records Commission over this protracted period and its successful completion depended upon the genuine interest and unfailing support of the Governor of Maryland. The Commission acknowledges also with grateful appreciation the constant and invaluable cooperation of the Adjutant General of Maryland. The Commission is greatly indebted to the World War Division of the Adjutant General's Office, War Department, to the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, and to the Adjutant and Inspector's Office, U. S. Marine Corps, for excellent cooperation throughout the work on the Maryland records, which imposed a considerable burden on these offices. A special debt of gratitude is due also to the American Battle Monuments Commission for remarkably generous and valuable assistance, and to the Engineer Reproduction Plant, U. S. Army, for important service in printing the maps accompanying these volumes.

The Secretary desires also to express his personal appreciation to the members of the War Records Commission and especially to Messrs. Janney and Radcliffe, who were in more frequent contact with the work; to Mrs. Selma H. Adler, principal clerk, and the office force in general for faithful and efficient services; and to Mr. Louis H. Dielman, of the advisory committee, for extremely generous and helpful advice in connection with the editing of these volumes. A special tribute is due the Twentieth Century Press for excellent performance of the printing contract, marked throughout by exceptionally interested, obliging and liberal service.

KARL SINGEWALD,
Secretary.

INTRODUCTION

CHAPTER I

A GENERAL REVIEW OF THE WAR

The purpose herein is to sketch only in the broadest outline the major course of military and naval operations, omitting entirely outlying operations that had no important bearing on the main struggle. There is, of course, no purpose herein to cover the political and economic phases of the war.

The opening event was the declaration of war by Austria-Hungary on Serbia, July 28, 1914. Russian mobilization brought a declaration of war by Germany on August 1, followed by a similar declaration against France, August 3, 1914. Refusal by Belgium to allow free passage of troops led to a declaration of war by Germany on August 4, whereupon Great Britain at once declared war against Germany.

The German plan was to conquer France by a swift blow, meanwhile merely holding the Russians in check. The German armies advanced in a wide sweep through Belgium. The Belgian army and forts offered stiff opposition, which, however, did not check the German advance. Meanwhile, a French counter-offensive in Lorraine was repulsed. Russian mobilization was necessarily much slower. In order to relieve the pressure on France, however, the first Russian forces available invaded East Prussia, but suffered severe defeat. The German armies advanced to within 15 miles of Paris, but were halted and thrown back in the First Battle of the Marne, beginning September 6. By September 17, the French attack was in turn checked, leaving the Germans in possession of an important part of northern France. Having completed the conquest of Belgium with the exception of a small strip at the northern end of the French frontier, the Germans attempted to advance along the coast for the capture of the Channel ports, but were repulsed, the small British army taking a splendid part in the fighting. The western front now settled into a stalemate, characterized by trench warfare, the opposing forces facing each other along a line extending for over 450 miles from the English Channel to Switzerland. For over three years, neither side was able to achieve any major results.

The Allies' control of the seas was at once completely effective, except for a few German raiders, which were mostly disposed of before the end of the year. There were minor naval engagements, but the only contact between the main fleets was in the Battle of Jutland, May 1, 1916. In the initial engagement between the battle cruiser squadrons, the British suffered heavy loss. Late in the afternoon, the main fleets met, unexpectedly to the Germans. The Germans maneuvered to avoid a decisive engagement and under cover of the night managed to break through, returning to their bases. The British fleet, although suffering the heavier losses, was left in undisputed supremacy. The Allies' control of the seas was ultimately the determining factor in the war, enabling the Allies to draw supplies from all over the world, but effecting a blockade of the Central Powers that gradually depleted their material resources. The entrance of the United States into the war served further to tighten the blockade.

The situation was reversed, however, with respect to Russia. Germany controlled the entrance to the Baltic, and the Dardanelles were closed by the advent of Turkey on the side of the Central Powers in the fall of 1914, thus shutting off the favorable routes of supply to Russia. This greatly reduced Russia's military effectiveness, since Russia was sadly deficient in the munitions of war, and also cut off the supply of Russian wheat and oil. The British undertook to force the passage of the Dardanelles, beginning in February, 1915, with a naval attack, later supplemented by land forces. The campaign was disastrous, however, and the forces were finally withdrawn by January, 1916.

During the year 1915, there were no major developments on the western front. A large part of the German forces were occupied against Russia. Great Britain, which had only a small regular army at the opening of the war, was busy in raising and training large "new armies". The year was featured by big Russian offensives with vast armies, but poorly equipped and handicapped by inferior organization and transportation. Italy having entered the war in May, 1915, Austria was obliged to devote one-half of her strength on this front. The Russians achieved large successes over the Austrians, but were in turn disastrously routed by the Germans, so that by the end of the year Russian Poland was occupied. Bulgaria entered the war on the side of the Central Powers in October, 1915, and Serbia was overrun in a swift joint campaign by Austria and Bulgaria. An Allied expedition to Saloniki was too late to aid Serbia, but was retained for its moral effect on the Balkans, being later joined by the rehabilitated Serbian army. Turkish attacks against the Suez Canal were repulsed. A British campaign from the Persian Gulf into Mesopotamia advanced almost to Bagdad, but ended disastrously in the surrender of General Townshend's army at Kut-el-Amara in April, 1916.

By the turn of the year 1916, the British army in France had reached large proportions. The Allies now planned simultaneous offensives on all fronts. On the western front, however, the course of events during the first half of the year was largely determined by the great German assault on Verdun in an effort to break the strong French defense system in this region. The losses on both sides were enormous, but the Germans failed to accomplish their purpose. The Allies in turn undertook offensive operations, notably a big British offensive in the Somme region in the fall of 1916, but without major results. An Austrian offensive on the Italian front in the spring of 1916 was checked, followed by the withdrawal of reserves to stem the Russian tide. Renewed Italian offensives were repulsed as in 1915. The Russians resumed the offensive with huge armies, but the deficiency in organization and material was even more pronounced than in the previous year. The Russians invaded Galicia, gaining large successes against the Austrians. The German counter-stroke, however, resulted in the complete rout of the Russians, the German advance into Russia being limited only by the inadvisability of pushing too far into this vast country. Roumania, which had cast in her lot with the Allies late in August, was overrun in a swift, decisive campaign. Thus was opened a valuable new region of supply to the Central Powers, including a large part of the Ukraine country in Russia. The British launched a new campaign in Mesopotamia, resulting in the capture of Bagdad in March, 1917. A British advance from Egypt into Palestine had achieved no marked success by the end of 1916.

The Germans used submarines to attack Allied shipping from the very beginning of the war. In February, 1915, to counter the Allied blockade of Germany, a "war zone" was declared around the British Isles, in which any ships would be subject to sinking without warning. The number of German submarines was as yet comparatively small and the sinkings were not so large as to constitute a menace to the Allies. The protests of neutrals, especially a severe warning from the United States, led Germany to discontinue the "unrestricted" submarine warfare in April, 1916. The situation at the end of the year 1916 was that Germany had won sweeping success on the eastern front, but was deadlocked on the western front with no likely prospects of an early decision. The prolongation of the struggle meant an inevitable draining of economic resources. Germany, therefore, made peace overtures based on the prestige of her military successes, but these overtures were spurned by the Allies. Germany in the meantime had built more submarines and in the fall of 1916 renewed operations on a more extensive scale. Upon the failure of her peace move, the submarine offered her only likely prospect of forcing the Allies to terms. Germany accordingly declared a renewal of unrestricted submarine warfare, effective February 1, 1917, although fully realizing that this would probably draw the United States into the war. Germany counted upon the submarines to cripple the Allies' supply system and to prevent the transportation of American forces to Europe in decisive strength.

The German submarine campaign in the spring of 1917 marked a crisis for the Allies. The sinkings mounted rapidly, in April reaching a monthly total of nearly 1,000,000 tons. It was plainly recognized that, unless means were found to reduce these losses, the German purpose would be accomplished before the end of the year. The submarines found a fruitful field not only in the waters around the British Isles but also in the Mediterranean, operating from the Austrian naval bases on the Adriatic. The number of German submarines was not very large—only 148 in February, 1917, and building at the rate of 2 or 3 a week. This meant only about 12 to 15 actually engaged in offensive operations at any one time.

The utmost efforts were made to put into service in patrolling against the submarines all available vessels, including destroyers, small cruisers, gunboats, converted yachts. The British destroyers, however, were mostly required for service with the Grand Fleet, and the available vessels were grossly inadequate to cover the wide areas of the submarine operations. The United States, upon entering the war in April, 1917, made an immediate valuable contribution of a division of destroyers, steadily augmented by additional destroyers and other patrol vessels. The convoy system was now gradually introduced—that is, assembling a group of merchant ships at a rendezvous beyond the zone of submarine operations and escorting them through the danger zone with destroyers and other naval vessels. The convoy system proved very effective, the losses of vessels thus protected averaging only one-half of one per cent during the entire period. There were gradually developed and improved, also, various methods of combating the submarine—sound detection devices, depth charges, bombs, airplanes. By the fall of 1917, the crisis was past—the sinkings, although still large, being considerably reduced. The total tonnage sunk by German submarines in 1917 amounted to 3,500,000. The sinkings during the second quarter of the year averaged 30 ships weekly, reduced in the third quarter to 20. The number of German submarines destroyed during the year was 75.

During the year 1918, the anti-submarine campaign met with increasing success, while construction of new shipping was growing apace, especially on the part of the United States. The number of destroyers and chasers was greatly increased, and the various measures for combating the submarines were further developed and amplified. Early in 1918, the mining of the Dover Straits was finally made fully effective. This route, however, had always been hazardous, and the usual route of the submarines was by the north around the British Isles. In the spring of 1918, there was begun the great Northern Barrage, or mine system extending across the North Sea from the Orkneys to the coast of Norway. This was not quite completed at the Armistice, but was already largely effective. The anti-submarine campaign was less successful in the Mediterranean, where the submarines continued active operations until the capture of the Austrian naval bases in October, 1918. The average sinkings by German submarines during the first quarter of the year 1918 amounted to 17 ships weekly, reduced in the third quarter to hardly more than 10. The number of German submarines destroyed during the first nine months of the year was 60.

The year 1917 opened with the Allies in a position of large numerical superiority on the western front, their combined forces numbering 3,900,000 against the Germans' 2,500,000. The Russian military power was largely disintegrated, but it was still necessary for the Central Powers to retain large forces on this front as well as on the Italian front. The Allies' superiority on the western front was at the highest point reasonably to be expected, prior to the entrance of the United States into the war. The Allies, therefore, determined to attempt a decision on the battle-front in France. The British and French alike launched big offensives. The French offensive was partly forestalled by a strategic German withdrawal to the "Hindenburg Line", leaving behind them an area of devastated country. The Allied offensives were pressed vigorously throughout the spring, but without large success and with frightful losses. By summer, it was evident that the great Allied effort had signally failed. This resulted in a severe slump in morale, especially among the French, widespread disaffection making its appearance in the army.

In March, 1917, occurred the revolution in Russia, overthrowing the Czarist government. For a brief period, there was hope that this might rejuvenate Russian purpose and military enterprise. The resulting chaos, however, soon dispelled this hope. The Kerensky government undertook in good faith to carry on the war, but the efforts were feeble. In October occurred the Bolshevik counter-revolution, resulting in the practical cessation of Russian military operations. Parleys were begun with Germany, culminating in the signing of peace treaty in March, 1918. Meanwhile, with German aid a sudden offensive was launched on the Italian front, resulting in the disastrous defeat of the Italians at Caporetto in October, 1917. The only Allied success was in the relatively minor Palestine campaign, which was renewed in the fall of 1917, culminating in the capture of Jerusalem before the end of the year.

The year 1917 ended with Germany at the height of her military successes. Russia was definitely out and Italy harmless for the time being, so that Germany was in position to mass her strength on the western front. On April 1, 1918, the Germans actually had a numerical superiority on the western front, the comparative rifle-strength (i.e., number of riflemen ready for front-line service) being 1,569,000 for the Germans and 1,245,000 for the Allies. Germany therefore undertook to win a decision before the United States forces weighed heavily in the situation. On March 21, a powerful offensive based upon extensive preparations was launched in the Somme region, at the junction of the British and French armies, making such striking gains as to throw consternation into the ranks of the Allies. The crisis forced the final step in effecting unity of command on the part of the Allies through the appointment of Marshal Foch as commander-in-chief. The utmost efforts were made to strengthen the Allied front, especially by expediting the movement of American troops and by throwing them into the combat as rapidly as possible. The next German offensive was in the Lys River region in Flanders, April 9 to 27, followed by a powerful thrust from the Aisne River, May 27 to June 5. The German advance reached the Marne River, within 40 miles of Paris, but was checked at Chateau-Thierry. This marked the climax of the German efforts. The rapid arrival of American troops brought the rifle-strength of the Allies up to the Germans by the middle of June, and thereafter the Allies had a growing numerical superiority. The Germans undertook two more offensives—in the Montdidier-Noyon region June 9 to 13 in an effort to straighten out the pocket between the Somme and Marne salients, and in the Champagne region July 15 to 18. The Montdidier-Noyon operation met with comparatively small success, and the Champagne-Marne drive was promptly halted.

The Allies promptly inaugurated a counter-offensive, the initial stroke being delivered on the west flank of the Marne salient. In this Aisne-Marne operation, July 18 to August 6, the Germans were driven back practically to the line which they held prior to their May offensive. The German lines were hardly stabilized in this region, when the British launched on August 6 a successful offensive on the Somme front. The French resumed the offensive on August 18 in the Oise-Aisne operation, and on August 19 the Ypres-Lys offensive was opened. American divisions, serving with the French and British armies, participated in the various operations, especially from May, 1918. The American Army reduced the St. Mihiel salient, September 12 to 16, and on September 26 in conjunction with the French Fourth Army launched the Meuse-Argonne offensive, joining up with the Oise-Aisne operation to the westward. The Allies were thus conducting a sustained offensive extending over the major part of the battle-front in France and Belgium, driving the Germans steadily back until the Armistice. In this concluding period, the Allies had a large superiority, the comparative rifle-strength on November 1 being 1,485,000 for the Allies and 866,000 for the Germans. The Allies' preponderance in artillery, aircraft and tanks was equally marked.

Meanwhile, Germany's allies collapsed. Bulgaria, invaded by the Allied forces from Saloniki and from Serbia, sought an armistice on September 29. Turkey, with her armies defeated in Syria and Mesopotamia, capitulated in October. A new Austrian offensive against Italy in June had been halted at the Piave River. As the tide turned against the Central Powers, disintegration set in, and by October Austria was in a state of demoralization. The Italian offensive, opened October 24, quickly resulted in the complete rout of the Austrians. On November 3, Austria capitulated.

The Allies had not expected to win a final decision on the western front in 1918. Their superiority developed so rapidly, however, due mainly to American reinforcements, that they were enabled to press their offensive without let-up. At the Armistice, the total Allied forces in France and Belgium numbered 6,427,100, as compared to 3,562,180 for the Germans. The German armies were not yet driven back to their own frontier, but they were hard-pressed and their lines of communication threatened, so that there was imminent danger of collapse. The German capitulation was precipitated by a break in the nation's morale, resulting from the sudden revelation by the military chiefs late in September that defeat was imminent instead of the confidently expected victory. The first German peace note was addressed to the Allies on October 3. In the concluding days, revolution occurred, forcing the Kaiser to abdicate, and demoralization was growing throughout the country. The fleet was ordered to make a final bid for victory, but was held in its bases by open mutiny. The Armistice was signed at 11 a. m. on November 11, by its terms amounting to an unconditional surrender on the part of Germany.

The treaty of peace was signed at Versailles on June 28, 1919, and became generally effective by ratification. The United States, although party signatory, failed to ratify. By Joint Resolution of Congress, approved July 2, 1921, the state of war between the United States and Germany was declared at an end, followed by the signing of a separate treaty of peace on August 25, 1921.

CHAPTER II

THE U. S. ARMY IN THE WAR

When the United States entered the war, the Allies urgently represented that their own reserves of man-power were almost exhausted and that future Allied superiority on the western front to insure a conclusive victory would largely depend upon the United States. The United States, accordingly, promptly undertook military preparations on a vast scale. From April 1, 1917, to November 11, 1918, the strength of the U. S. Army in active service grew from 207,500 (including 79,912 National Guard in Federal service) to a maximum of 3,673,888. At the Armistice, there were over 2,000,000 American troops in France, and the plans for 1919 called for doubling these forces. The net expenditures for the Army from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1920, amounted to $13,730,395,576, from which deducting $374,773,656 estimated ordinary expenditures for this period, leaves $13,355,622,920 extra war expenditures.

The way had been paved to some extent during the previous year. A large part of the Regular Army and almost the entire National Guard served on the Mexican border in 1916, receiving valuable training and experience. Even more important, the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, placed the military establishment upon a more comprehensive and systematic basis. This Act provided that "the Army of the United States shall consist of the Regular Army, the Volunteer Army, the Officers Reserve Corps, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the National Guard while in the service of the United States, and such other land forces as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law". Plans were at once laid for the gradual strengthening or building up of the several component parts of the military forces, as contemplated in the Act.

The Act of May 18, 1917, authorized an enormous expansion of the Army—by large increases of the Regular Army and of the National Guard and by the first two increments of 500,000 men each of a National Army to be raised by selective draft. Further increases were subsequently authorized as required, and troops were in effect raised as rapidly as it was possible to handle them. The Act of May 18, 1917, provided that "all enlistments, including those in the Regular Army Reserve, which are in force on the date of approval of this Act, and which would terminate during the emergency, shall continue in force during the emergency unless sooner discharged". Furlough to the Reserve was suspended during the war. Enlistment was authorized for the period of the emergency, and the privilege of discharge upon termination of the emergency was extended to those who had enlisted in the Regular Army or Enlisted Reserve Corps since April 1, 1917, or in the National Guard since June 3, 1916.

The Regular Army, in addition to a substantial increase in permanent authorized strength, received large temporary increases. From April 1, 1917, to August 7, 1918, enlistments in the Regular Army numbered 390,874. The Regular Army Reserve, numbering 8,355 on June 30, 1917, was mobilized on May 1, 1917, or at subsequent dates.

The Act of June 3, 1916, made provision for an Enlisted Reserve Corps in five sections—Engineer, Signal, Quartermaster, Ordnance and Medical, the purpose being to build up a reserve of specially qualified men. By June 30, 1918, some 80,000 men had been called into active service through the Enlisted Reserve Corps. Under the selective draft, bona-fide medical, dental, veterinary and engineer students were allowed to enlist in the Enlisted Reserve Corps, remaining on inactive status until completion of their studies. Approximately 17,500 medical, dental, and veterinary students and 2,500 engineer students were thus enlisted in the Enlisted Reserve Corps. The Enlisted Reserve Corps was also used to relieve the situation arising from the withdrawal of skilled industrial workers into the Army, by transferring duly certified skilled mechanics to the Reserve inactive list, releasing them for industrial work. Approximately 3,500 mechanics were released from military service in this way. After May 13, 1918, in lieu of this method, men were released simply by granting them agricultural or industrial furloughs.

A large part of the National Guard was mustered into Federal service for guard duty by successive calls of the President, dating from March 25, 1917. Finally, by proclamation dated July 3, 1917, the remainder of the National Guard was called into the service of the United States in three parts as of and from the dates July 15, July 25, and August 5, respectively. By the same proclamation, the President drafted into the U. S. Army as of and from August 5, 1917, all members of the National Guard and all enlisted members of the National Guard Reserve, except members of staff corps and departments not included in the personnel of tactical organizations and except officers specially notified. The National Guard thus drafted lost its status as State militia. The total strength of the National Guard in the service of the United States on August 5, 1917, was 379,323. Enlistments continued to be accepted into the National Guard in United States service.

By the Act of May 18, 1917, the selective draft was adopted as the main basis for mobilizing the man-power of the nation for military service. The forces raised by process of induction constituted the National Army, although enlistments were also accepted for the National Army. There were four registrations: June 5, 1917, ages 21 to 30, inclusive; June 5 and August 24, 1918, those attaining the age of 21 since the last registration; September 12, 1918, ages 18 to 45, inclusive. Inductions started September 5, 1917, and ceased November 11, 1918, except that inductions into the Students Army Training Corps that were in process on October 31 were authorized to be completed not later than December 1. Class I of the first three registrations was practically used up, but, except for the Students Army Training Corps, inductions under the last registration were just getting under way at the Armistice. The Students Army Training Corps was established in the fall of 1918 at 687 educational institutions, especially for the newly registered men of ages 18 to 21—total enrollment 170,000, comprising substantially the entire student body at colleges and technical schools throughout the country. There were inducted altogether 2,810,296 men, including 283,560 voluntary inductions upon application before draft. After December 15, 1917, registrants under the selective service were not permitted to enlist in the Army, except within narrow limitations. On August 8, 1918, in anticipation of the approaching registration covering ages to 45 inclusive, further enlistments were discontinued except in the case of bona-fide applications pending on that date. Registrants, however, although not permitted to enlist, might apply for voluntary induction prior to actual draft.

The Army Nurse Corps, on April 6, 1917, numbered 403 nurses in service—233 regular and 170 reserve. On November 11, 1918, there were in service 3,524 regular nurses and 17,956 reserve nurses. The reserve nurses were enrolled through the American Red Cross and had no military status until actually assigned to duty as reserve nurses, Army Nurse Corps. Under a plan approved May 25, 1918, there was established the Army School of Nursing for the training of nursing personnel. To December 21, 1918, there were accepted 5,869 applications, and 1,578 student nurses were assigned to military hospitals for training. There was developed, also, a dietitian service under the Medical Department. On November 11, 1918, there were 356 dietitians attached to Army hospitals, but these dietitians had not yet been accorded a military status.

The vast increase in the strength of the Army presented an enormous problem in providing officers, over 200,000 being commissioned during the war. The officer personnel of the Regular Army, numbering 5,791 on April 1, 1917, increased to nearly 11,000 as of August 7, 1918, including temporary appointments. The National Guard, when drafted into the U. S. Army on August 5, 1917, comprised 12,100 commissioned officers, increased to 17,000 as of August 7, 1918. The great bulk of the additional officers were commissioned in the Officers Reserve Corps and in the National Army, the figures as of August 7, 1918, being 89,476 (37,500 line and 51,976 staff) in the Officers Reserve Corps and 49,500 commissioned in the National Army. After August 7, 1918, all commissions were in the general U. S. Army.

The regular officers were very generally advanced to higher grades by temporary commissions in the Regular Army or in the National Army. The class of 1917 at the Military Academy was graduated in April, 1917, the class of 1918 in August, 1917, and the class of 1919 in June, 1918, the course being thereupon established on a three-year basis instead of four as before the war. In the fall of 1918, in order to utilize more intensively the training facilities at the Military Academy, it was decided to operate a one-year course during the emergency, and the classes of 1920 and 1921 were graduated on November 1, 1918. After the Armistice, the one-year plan was abandoned. The total number of commissions issued to graduates of the Military Academy from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, was 928. For the two fiscal years ending June 30, 1917, and 1918, appointments in the line of the Regular Army (in the grade of provisional second lieutenant) from sources other than the Military Academy were as follows: from the Regular Army and the National Guard 890; from the Officers Reserve Corps and graduates of distinguished military colleges 509; from civil life 3,485. The civilian appointees were mostly from the officer training camps. In addition to the appointments as second lieutenant in the line of the Army, there were of course appointments in the various staff corps. Appointments in the permanent establishment, other than graduates of the Military Academy, were discontinued August 7, 1918, and were not resumed until after the Armistice.

The Officers Reserve Corps was organized under the Act of June 3, 1916, appointments being for a term of five years. Steps were at once taken to build up the corps, and by the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1917, there were substantial lists in the technical branches, but only a comparatively small number in the combatant branches. After April 18, 1917, no further commissions were issued in the line sections except upon completion of duty at a training camp, and officers previously commissioned in line sections were required to undergo the test of a training camp. Appointments in the Officers Reserve Corps were discontinued on August 7, 1918, and reserve officers who were on active duty on that date, or who were subsequently ordered to active duty during the war, were merged into the U. S. Army and their commissions converted into emergency commissions. Appointments in the Officers Reserve Corps were resumed as usual on November 15, 1918.

Under the Act of June 3, 1916, the Reserve Officers Training Corps was established at colleges and technical schools qualifying for the purpose, the members upon graduation being eligible for commissions in the Officers Reserve Corps. During the fiscal year ending June, 1918, there were R. O. T. C. units at 102 educational institutions throughout the country—total enrollment 36,000, graduated 3,364 in June, 1918. In the fall of 1918, the R. O. T. C. was supplanted by the S. A. T. C., but the R. O. T. C. was resumed upon demobilization of the S. A. T. C. at the end of the calendar year.

About 70,000 officers were commissioned direct from civil life, of whom 42,000 were in the Medical Department. About 96,000, however, amounting to nearly one-half of all officers commissioned during the war, were graduated from the officer training camps. In the combatant branches, over two-thirds were graduates of training camps and three-fourths of the original commissions were in the grade of second lieutenant. The plan of producing officer personnel through brief, intensive courses at military training camps for selected civilians had been tested at the Plattsburg camp in the summer of 1915 and similar camps in 1916. On May 15, 1917, officer training camps for a three months' course were opened at 16 Army posts throughout the country, from which 27,338 candidates were graduated and commissioned. A second series of camps, opening August 27, 1917, resulted in 17,237 commissions. A third series was opened on January 5, 1918, at the divisional camps, being restricted almost entirely to men selected from the ranks—with 11,657 graduates. A fourth series was opened on May 15, 1918, at the divisional camps, but these schools were shortly separated from the divisions and five central officer training schools were established at permanent replacement camps—three for Infantry, one for Machine Gun training and one for Field Artillery. Special officer training schools were established also for the Coast Artillery and for several of the staff corps. Officer training schools were conducted, also, in the American Expeditionary Forces. The officer training schools were in full swing at the Armistice. The candidates then under training were given the option of immediate discharge or of completion. The majority accepted discharge, but a total of 15,134 completed the courses and were commissioned in the Officers Reserve Corps, inactive status.

The distinction between Regular Army, Reserve Corps, National Guard and National Army was observed during the first year of the war, commissions and enlistments reading in one or other of these component parts of the U. S. Army. The numbering of organizations was based on the same distinction—e.g., Infantry divisions numbered 1 to 25 Regular Army, 26 to 75 National Guard, 76 and upwards National Army, and the component units of divisions 1 to 100 Regular Army, 101 and upwards National Guard, 301 and upwards National Army. Transfers and replacements, however, soon confused these distinctions. At length, by War Department order of August 7, 1918, the distinctions were abolished and the use of the single designation U. S. Army adopted.

Existing strength April 1, 1917.....	281,880

The quartering and training of these vast additional forces presented an enormous problem. The facilities of the existing Army posts were quickly overtaxed, although increased as rapidly as possible. For the National Army and the National Guard, great new camps were required, designed primarily for Infantry divisions of normal strength about 28,000. Plans were promptly laid and construction pushed, so that these camps were in large part ready in September, 1917. There were 16 cantonments of wooden barracks for National Army divisions, located in the geographical areas from which the men were drawn. The 16 National Guard camps were located in the South, being at first intended as only temporary and sheltered mainly in tents, but later also converted for the most part into permanent camps by construction of wooden barracks. The total capacity of these 32 big camps ultimately reached 1,500,000 men. The Quartermaster Corps, Medical Department, Ordnance Department, Chemical Warfare Service, Air Service, Motor Transport Corps, and other branches built great establishments for their special requirements. By November 1, 1918, there were 448 major construction projects for the Army in the United States.

In addition to the primary physical and military training, there was entailed a vast amount of technical training. An army division is made up over one-third of trade specialists. Schools were conducted in the camps, and detachments of men were placed for periods of study in technical schools throughout the country. Large numbers of men were trained for the special arms or branches of the service at the respective camps or establishments of these services. The average period of training of the American soldier was six months in the United States, two months in training area in France, and one month in a quiet sector at the front before being sent into active combat. The average period for a division was eight months from date of organization to dispatch overseas. After the opening of the great German drive in the spring of 1918, the training period was shortened.

The program, adopted as early as July, 1917, called for 650,000 American troops in France by June 15, 1918. By winter 1917-1918, the situation was such that the Allies urgently requested an accelerated movement of troops from the United States. The British furnished shipping to assist in transportation. At the end of March, 1918, there were 300,000 American troops overseas, at the end of May 600,000, and by the middle of July 1,200,000. In the crisis arising from the great German drive, the utmost efforts were exerted to expedite the movement of troops. The heaviest shipment was from May to September, 1918, reaching the astounding figures of nearly 300,000 monthly. On November 11, 1918, the American forces overseas numbered 2,084,000. At that date, 42 combat divisions had been sent overseas besides other troops, 12 divisions were well advanced in training in the United States, and 4 were being organized. The plans for 1919 called for 80 combat divisions in France by July and 100 by the end of the year.

In addition to the shipment of the troops themselves, there was the enormous and constantly growing shipment of supplies for the Army. One-half of the troops were transported by British ships, but the cargo service was almost entirely by American vessels. In the face of the acute shortage in shipping, a great fleet was gradually secured, comprising at the Armistice troop ships of 500,000 deadweight tons and cargo ships of 2,750,000 tons. To December 31, 1918, about 7,500,000 tons of cargo were shipped to the American Expeditionary Forces. The Navy operated the troop transports and also developed the Naval Overseas Transportation Service for operation of the cargo fleet. The principal port was Hoboken, N. J., from which were shipped four-fifths of the troops and over one-half of the cargo. Next in volume was Newport News, Va., handling large numbers of troops and one-fourth of the cargo. Other important ports, especially for cargo, were Baltimore and Philadelphia.

The normal national defense plans contemplated an Army of 500,000 in the event of war, and the supply program was planned on that scale. The expansion of the program upon entering the World War vastly exceeded all calculations. The initial equipment of newly-raised troops, of course, requires a rate of production several times as high as necessary thereafter to maintain their supply. The American Army in France was in effect based on the United States, so that it was necessary to build up reserves both in France and in the United States. The industrial resources of the country were to a large extent converted for Army use and production was vastly increased for war purposes. Matters were facilitated somewhat by the fact that many American industrial plants were already equipped for munitions production on account of the Allies. At the same time, however, it was essential not to curtail the Allies' supplies from this country. In considering American performance in production of munitions and especially in shipment to France up to the date of the Armistice, there must be borne in mind the limitations imposed by regard for the Allies' requirements and by the shortage in shipping.

The supply of quartermaster goods kept pace with requirements. The United States furnished its own small arms and ammunition in ample quantities. This country led in the manufacture of smokeless powder, supplying large quantities to the British and French, and before the Armistice was leading in high explosives. The American production of machine guns to the date of the Armistice was 181,622, or more than ample for the existing forces. The American supply, however, was not ready for the earlier overseas divisions, and 5,300 heavy machine guns and 34,000 automatic rifles were obtained from the French. There were actually used in France of American manufacture 15,027 heavy machine guns, including 8,039 for aircraft, and 17,664 light machine guns.

The element of time entered more largely into the production of artillery and aircraft. The United States production was reaching full swing in the fall of 1918 and would have contributed an overwhelming advantage in a 1919 campaign. The United States furnished its own guns for training purposes, but was largely dependent upon the French for artillery at the front. Under the arrangement, the United States furnished material in exchange for the finished product. The American production to November 11, 1918, was only 1,642 units actually completed, but also a large quantity near completion. The American Army in France received altogether 3,499 pieces of artillery, of which 477 were of American manufacture, and used at the front 2,251 pieces, of which 130 were American. The artillery strength of the several armies in the war zone at the Armistice was as follows: French 11,638 guns; British 6,993; American 3,008. The American production of artillery shells reached large volume in the fall of 1918, and shipment to France in quantity had begun. The artillery ammunition used by the American forces in battle was nearly all of French manufacture, but the approaching supply from the United States made possible a freer use of the French and British reserves. Inasmuch as artillery troops require longer training than the infantry, American divisions were to some extent supported by French and British artillery, especially at first, amounting altogether to an average of $6\frac{1}{2}$ days out of 100 days at the front.

In aircraft, also, the United States supplied its own needs for training purposes in this country, but was dependent upon the French and to a lesser extent upon the British for a large part of its requirements for training planes overseas and almost entirely for combat planes. American production to the date of the Armistice, besides 8,000 training planes, included 3,227 service planes, of which 1,885 had been shipped to France. The Allies furnished 3,800 service planes to the A. E. F. The American forces in the zone of the advance received altogether 2,698 planes, of which 667 were American-made. The strength of the several armies in battle planes at the Armistice was as follows: French 3,321; British 1,758; American 740. The training of American aviation personnel proceeded apace and the number of American aviators at the front increased rapidly from the spring of 1918. The American forces in action, however, continued until the Armistice to be supported in part by French and British air squadrons, although in lessening degree.

American production of tanks was reaching a quantity scale by November, 1918, but none had been shipped as yet to France. The A. E. F. obtained 227 light tanks from the French and 64 heavy tanks from the British. The American Army was also supported by tank detachments from the Allies, but altogether was very poorly provided in this arm of the service. The American production of toxic gases increased rapidly during 1918 and at the Armistice was ahead of any other country. The supply of shell containers was far behind the production of gas, and large quantities of surplus gas were turned over to the French and British. The Chemical Warfare Service of the American Army developed into one of its most efficient auxiliary services.

General John J. Pershing, commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, arrived in Paris on June 13, 1917. By urgent request, there was sent promptly to France the first contingent of troops, comprising one combat division, several engineer regiments and other special troops. The growth of the American forces in France depended upon the raising and training of levies in the United States, involving a considerable time element. As hereinbefore stated the A. E. F.

numbered 300,000 at the end of March, 1918, and 1,200,000 by the middle of July, reaching 2,084,000 by the date of the Armistice.

The plans from the outset contemplated an independent American Army. The logical location for an American sector was at the eastern end of the battle-front—that is, in the Lorraine region, since the British were committed to the Flanders front for guarding the Channel ports, and the French especially to the front before Paris. Moreover, the Channel ports and the railroads of northern France were already overtaxed for British and French supply, so that the American Army would have to depend largely upon the Atlantic ports and the railroads of central France. The Lorraine front was a vital sector in the German defense, being the pivot of their battle-line in France, and guarding one of their two main lines of communication. An advance in this region, moreover, would quickly threaten important German sources of coal and iron.

The handling of a large American Army in France involved vast problems of organization and supply. The general headquarters of the A. E. F. were removed on September 1, 1917, from Paris to Chaumont. The A. E. F. was in effect based on the United States, 3,000 miles away, and the distance across France to the designated American sector was 400 miles. The problems of transportation and supply were stupendous. With the growth of the American Army, the Line of Communications was reorganized in February, 1918, as the Services of Supply, with headquarters at Tours. All areas behind the zone of active operations were under the Commanding General, Services of Supply. The various services and departments, except Adjutant-General, Inspector-General, and Judge Advocate-General, were grouped for supply purposes under the Commanding General, Services of Supply. The Services of Supply was organized territorially into three main divisions: base sections, comprising the areas around the ports; an intermediate section, comprising the region of the great storage depots; and an advance section, extending up to the zone of the armies. There were ultimately nine base sections, including one in England and one in Italy. One-half of the American troops landed in England en route to France, and England was used also to a considerable extent as a base for training, rest and convalescent centers, and hospitalization. The Services of Supply required over one-fourth of the American troops in France. At the Armistice, there were 380,000 soldiers directly under the Commanding General, Services of Supply, besides thousands of civilian laborers and 31,000 German prisoners, and there were in addition 160,000 non-combatant troops in the zone of the armies mostly engaged in similar services. The organization and facilities were adequate to provide for the American Army of 2,000,000 then in France, and plans were well under way for expansion to handle an additional 2,000,000.

As hereinbefore stated, the cargo shipped from the United States to the A. E. F. to December 31, 1918, amounted to 7,500,000 tons. A cross-Channel fleet comprising a large number of vessels was operated by the A. E. F. for transporting troops and supplies from England to France. The shortage of shipping made it imperative to purchase supplies in Europe in so far as possible. In fact, some 10,000,000 tons of supplies were purchased in Europe, or more than one-half of the total requirements. An extensive purchasing system was developed, operating in coordination with the Allies.

To the date of the Armistice, 831 construction projects had been undertaken by the Corps of Engineers in the A. E. F. The requisite facilities in the supply system in France were ports, transportation and storage. The A. E. F. at the Armistice was using nine ports in France. A vast amount of construction work was done at the ports, including improvement and enlargement of docking facilities, railroad terminals and depots. The American Army transportation system was superimposed on the French railroads. The French railroads were badly run down during the war, and the American railway service troops did an important work in rehabilitating the road-bed and equipment, assisting the French also by loan of operating personnel and equipment. To supplement the existing system, 1,002 miles of standard gauge railroad track were laid, consisting mostly of yards at ports and depots, cut-offs and double-tracking at congested points. There were shipped from the United States to the A. E. F. 1,791 locomotives and 26,994 freight cars. The Engineers also laid narrow-gauge railways, especially in the advance zone, and improved or constructed hundreds of miles of roads. On account of inadequate shipping, the supply of motor trucks from the United States was far behind requirements. Large numbers were purchased in France, but there was a considerable shortage during the period up to the Armistice. The motor truck tonnage in the A. E. F. at that time amounted to 60,000 tons, or two-thirds of estimated requirements. There was also a serious shortage of horses and mules, due largely to the fact that the promised supply in France fell far short. The shortage in November, 1918, amounted to nearly one-half of requirements. The Signal Corps in the A. E. F. strung thousands of miles of telegraph and telephone wires and at the height of activities operated a system of 215,500 kilometers of lines, sending as high as 47,000 telegrams a day. The building construction reached enormous proportions, including depots, hospital centers and so forth. It was estimated that, if all the buildings constructed by the A. E. F. were consolidated in a single row of the width of a standard barrack, it would extend 730 miles. The existing French facilities and quarters were of course utilized wherever possible, and the billeting system was largely used for the American troops. In connection with the construction work, the Engineers conducted lumbering and quarrying operations on a large scale.

The general military training of the troops was conducted in the United States, but the training for front-line service under actual conditions, especially trench warfare, was completed in France. Many American officers and non-coms attended the French and British army schools. The A. E. F. also developed a system of corps schools for personnel of the tactical units, as well as base training centers for special service troops and replacements. Experienced French and British personnel assisted in these schools. Officer candidate schools were conducted, graduating 10,976. To November 14, 1918, in the A. E. F., 12,732 officers were commissioned from the ranks. The general plan of training of divisions in France, assuming that their training in the United States was adequate, was one month for instruction of small units from battalions down, one month in quiet sectors by battalions, and one month field practice by divisions including the artillery. The earlier divisions received their front-line training with the British and French. The artillery was trained in conjunction with French units. The emergency growing out of the great German offensive in 1918 disarranged the regular training program to a large extent, the Allies urging that troops should be sent to the front with only a minimum of training in trench warfare. The French and British had almost discarded open warfare tactics, confining their training to trench warfare, but the American training throughout laid emphasis on open warfare tactics and a spirit of offensive.

By March, 1918, four American divisions had appeared at the front, the numerical strength of an American division being roughly double a British, French or German division. First Army Corps headquarters had been organized and plans for an American sector on the battle-front were taking shape. The great German offensive, however, delayed the plans for an independent American Army. In the emergency, General Pershing placed all available combat troops at the disposal of Marshal Foch, the Allied commander-in-chief. The Allies were urgent for expediting the shipment of troops from the United States and for sending them to the front as rapidly as possible. They desired the amalgamation of American troops into the British and French forces, even to the extent of using them as replacements, but this was contrary to the American policy. The Allies also requested priority for infantry and machine gun units in shipment of troops from the United States. This policy was followed in so far as appeared absolutely essential in the emergency, but always keeping in view the purpose of building up a balanced American Army. The necessary priority for infantry and machine gun troops considerably handicapped the formation of an independent American Army and accounted in part for the deficiency in artillery, aircraft and other special troops.

The first participation of American troops in active fighting was by the 11th Engineers in the British attack at Cambrai in November, 1917. American divisions entered the line at first in quiet sectors and did not take an active part in the fighting until the latter part of the German offensives in the spring of 1918. On May 28, the 1st Division made a successful attack at Cantigny, holding its gains against strong German counterattacks. On June 1, the 2d Division was thrown into line across the Chateau-Thierry Road and played an important part in halting the German advance upon Paris. At the same time, the 3d Division's motorized machine gun battalion assisted in holding the crossing of the Marne at Chateau-Thierry. Beginning June 4, the 2d Division launched vigorous attacks, capturing Belleau Woods and making considerable further gains against strong German resistance.

On July 15, there were four American divisions in line on the Marne front and two in support; one division in support of the French east of Rheims; four colored regiments with the French in the Argonne; five divisions in line with the French on the Alsace-Lorraine front; five divisions with the British, of which three had elements in the line. In training areas, there were four divisions assembled and four in process of arriving. Second Corps headquarters was organized early in the year for administration of the divisions in training with the British, which reached ten in number, but five transferred in June to support the French. Third Corps headquarters was organized in May to administer three divisions in the Vosges region. On July 4, the First Corps assumed tactical control of a sector of the battle-front in the Chateau-Thierry region, comprising at the time, however, only one American division, while there were eight American divisions at the front serving with French corps.

In the last German offensive, launched July 15 on the Champagne-Marne front, the 42d Division was in the battle-line in the Champagne and the 3d Division on the Marne. A regiment of the 3d Division distinguished itself by holding its position although the enemy had pressed forward on both flanks. This German offensive was checked with comparatively small gains, and the French at once launched on July 18 a counter-offensive against the western face of the Marne salient. The American 1st and 2d Divisions and a French Moroccan Division were used as the spearhead of the attack, striking directly eastward to the heights south of Soissons. At a single bound, these three divisions broke through the enemy's defenses, thus threatening the communications leading into the salient. A general withdrawal from the Marne was immediately begun by the Germans, who fought stubbornly although pressed hard by the advancing forces along this entire front. The 2d Division was relieved during the night of July 19 and the 1st Division on July 21. A little to the south of the 2d Division, the 4th Division was in line with the French and was engaged until July 22. Farther south, the First Corps was engaged, comprising the 26th Division and a French division. Some elements of the 28th Division participated during the earlier part of the advance. In the First Corps, the 42d Division relieved the 26th Division on July 25 and extended its front, relieving the French division. The 42d Division was in turn relieved by the French division on August 3. To the eastward, the 3d Division was in action until July 30, when relieved by the 32d Division. On August 3, the 32d Division passed under control of the Third Corps, which made its first entrance into battle at this time. The Aisne-Marne Offensive terminated August 6, the Germans having been driven back from the Marne to the Vesle. The First and Third Corps then held a continuous front of 11 kilometers along the Vesle.

The First Corps was shortly transferred away from this front and the Third Corps took over also its portion of the line. The Third Corps, comprising the 28th and 77th Divisions, participated in the Oise-Aisne Offensive, launched on August 18. The 28th Division was withdrawn from the line on September 7, and on September 9 the Third Corps was transferred away from this front, the 77th Division however remaining in line on the Aisne River until September 17. The 32d Division, attached to a French corps north of Soissons, was engaged in the attack from August 29 to 31. On the British front, two regiments of the 33d Division participated in an attack on Hamel July 4 and again on August 9 at the opening of the Somme Offensive.

The tide of battle having definitely turned in favor of the Allies, the emergency requiring the dispersion of American divisions was no longer pressing. The organization of the American First Army was ordered, effective August 10, and its formation begun in the Chateau-Thierry region, with nominal control of a portion of the Vesle front. As its first operation, the American Army was assigned the reduction of the St. Mihiel salient, to be undertaken as soon as possible, and directions were promptly given for concentration in the St. Mihiel region. By August 30, the concentration of the scattered divisions, corps and army troops, of the quantities of supplies and munitions required, and the necessary construction of light railways and roads were well under way. The deficiencies of the American Army in artillery, aviation and special troops were largely met by the French. Meanwhile, the British offensive in the Somme region and the French offensive on the Oise-Aisne front were achieving such success that it was determined to exploit the Allied advantage to the fullest extent through the fall of 1918. The scope of the St. Mihiel operation was accordingly limited, and the American Army was required to prepare simultaneously for larger operations to follow on the Meuse-Argonne front, joining up with the general Allied drive. The entire sector of 150 kilometers front, extending from Port-sur-Seille, just east of the Moselle River, west to include the Argonne Forest, was placed under the command of General Pershing, including French divisions then in that zone. On August 30, the American First Army took over the active control of the front from Port-sur-Seille to Fresnes-en-Woevre, southeast of Verdun.

“The salient had been held by the Germans since September, 1914. It covered the most sensitive section of the enemy's position on the Western Front—namely, the Mezieres-Sedan-Metz Railroad and the Briey Iron Basin; it threatened the entire region between Verdun and Nancy, and interrupted the main rail line from Paris to the east. Its primary strength lay in the natural defensive features of the terrain itself. The western face of the salient extended along the rugged, heavily wooded eastern heights of the Meuse; the southern face followed the heights of the Meuse for 8 kilometers to the east and then crossed the plain of the Woevre, including within the German lines the detached heights of Loupmont and Montsec which dominated the plain and afforded the enemy unusual facilities for observation. The enemy had reinforced the positions by every artificial means during a period of four years.”

“On the night of September 11, the troops of the First Army were deployed in position. On the southern face of the salient was the First Corps, Maj. Gen. Liggett commanding, with the 82d, 90th, 5th, and 2d Divisions in line, extending from the Moselle westward. On its left was the Fourth Corps, Maj. Gen. Joseph T. Dickman commanding, with the 89th, 42d, and 1st Divisions, the left of this corps being opposite Montsec. These two Army Corps were to deliver the principal attack, the line pivoting on the center division of the First Corps. The 1st Division on the left of the Fourth Corps was charged with the double mission of covering its own flank while advancing some 20 kilometers due north toward the heart of the salient, where it was to make contact with the troops of the Fifth Corps. On the western face of the salient lay the Fifth Corps, Maj. Gen. George H. Cameron commanding, with the 26th Division, 15th French Colonial Division, and the 4th Division in line, from Mouilly west to Les Eparges and north to Watronville. Of these three divisions, the 26th alone was to make a deep advance directed southeast toward Vigneulles. The French Division was to make a short progression to the edge of the heights in order to cover the left of the 26th. The 4th Division was not to advance. In the center, between our Fourth and Fifth Army Corps, was the Second French Colonial Corps, Maj. Gen. E. J. Blondlat commanding, covering a front of 40 kilometers with 3 small French divisions. These troops were to follow up the retirement of the enemy from the tip of the salient."

"The French independent air force was at our disposal which, together with the British bombing squadrons and our own air forces, gave us the largest assembly of aviation that had ever been engaged in one operation. Our heavy guns were able to reach Metz and to interfere seriously with German rail movements."

"At dawn on September 12, after four hours of violent artillery fire of preparation, and accompanied by small tanks, the infantry of the First and Fourth Corps advanced. The infantry of Fifth Corps commenced its advance at 8 a. m. The operation was carried out with entire precision. Just after daylight on September 13, elements of the 1st and 26th Divisions made a junction near Hattonchatel and Vigneulles, 18 kilometers northeast of St. Mihiel. The rapidity with which our divisions advanced overwhelmed the enemy, and all objectives were reached by the afternoon of September 13. The enemy had apparently started to withdraw some of his troops from the tip of the salient on the eve of our attack, but had been unable to carry it through. We captured nearly 16,000 prisoners, 443 guns, and large stores of material and supplies. The energy and swiftness with which the operation was carried out enabled us to smother opposition to such an extent that we suffered less than 7,000 casualties during the actual period of the advance. The strength of the First Army in this battle totaled approximately 500,000 men, of whom about 70,000 were French. During the next two days the right of our line west of the Moselle River was advanced beyond the objectives laid down in the original orders. This completed the operation for the time being and the line was stabilized to be held by the smallest practicable force."

The definite decision for the Meuse-Argonne phase of the great Allied offensive was made on September 2. The American First Army was to attack between the Meuse River and the Argonne Forest, in conjunction with the French Fourth Army west of the Argonne. This portion of the line was of the highest strategical importance. All supplies and evacuations of the German forces in northern France were dependent upon two great railway systems—one in the north, passing through Liege, and the other in the south, with lines coming from Luxemburg, Thionville and Metz, having as its vital section the line Carignan—Sedan—Mezieres. From the Meuse-Argonne front, the distance to the Carignan—Mezieres railroad line was 50 kilometers. The successive German defensive positions necessarily converged closely in this region, the distance to the third German withdrawal position in the vicinity of the Meuse River being only 18 kilometers, as compared to as high as 65 kilometers farther to the westward.

On account of its vital importance, the enemy had developed on this front a defensive system of unusual strength, consisting of practically a continuous series of positions 20 kilometers or more in depth. In addition to the artificial defenses, the enemy was greatly aided by the natural features of the terrain. East of the Meuse, the dominating heights not only protected his left but gave him positions from which powerful artillery could deliver an oblique fire on the western bank. Batteries located in the elaborately fortified Argonne Forest covered his right flank and could cross their fire with that of the guns on the east bank of the Meuse. Midway between the Meuse and the Argonne Forest, the heights of Montfaucon offered perfect observation and formed a strong natural position which had been heavily fortified. The east and west ridges abutting on the Meuse and Aire River valleys afforded the enemy excellent machine gun positions, and north of Montfaucon densely wooded and rugged heights constituted natural features favorable to defensive fighting.

The American First Army was required to prepare simultaneously for two major operations, an interval of only 14 days separating the initiation of the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne attacks. The movement in such a short time of the immense number of troops and the amount of supplies involved in the Meuse-Argonne operation, over the few roads available and confined to the hours of darkness, was an extremely difficult problem. Seven divisions and practically all the artillery, aviation and other auxiliaries to be employed in the new operations were committed to the St. Mihiel attack and therefore could not be moved until its success was assured.

The front from Fresnes-en-Woevre, southeast of Verdun, to the western edge of the Argonne Forest, while nominally under General Pershing's control, did not actively become a part of his command until September 22. Of French troops, in addition to the Second Colonial Corps of 3 divisions, there was also the Seventeenth Corps of 3 divisions, holding the line north and east of Verdun. At the opening of the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, the enemy had on this front 10 divisions in line and 10 in reserve. The enemy were deceived as to the plans of the American Army, expecting a continuation of the drive toward Metz. French troops were maintained as a screen along the Meuse-Argonne front until the night before the battle, so that the actual attack was a tactical surprise.

"The axis of the attack was the line Montfaucon—Romagne—Buzancy, the purpose being to make the deepest penetration in the center, which, with the Fourth French Army advancing west of the Argonne, would force the enemy to evacuate that forest without our having to deliver a heavy attack in that difficult region."

"Following three hours of violent artillery fire of preparation, the Infantry advanced at 5:30 a. m. on September 26, accompanied by tanks. During the first two days of the attack, before the enemy was able to bring up his reserves, our troops made steady progress through the network of defenses. Montfaucon was held tenaciously by the enemy and was not captured until noon of the second day."

"By the evening of the 28th, a maximum advance of 11 kilometers had been achieved and we had captured Baulny, Epinonville, Septsarges, and Dannevoux. The right had made a splendid advance into the woods south of Briulles-sur-Meuse, but the extreme left was meeting strong resistance in the Argonne. The attack continued without interruption, meeting six new divisions which the enemy threw into first line before September 29. He developed a powerful machine gun defense supported by heavy artillery fire, and made frequent counter-attacks with fresh troops, particularly on the front of the 28th and 35th Divisions. These divisions had taken Varennes, Cheppy, Baulny, and Charpentry, and the line was within 2 kilometers of Apremont. We were no longer engaged in a maneuver for the pinching out of a salient, but were necessarily committed, generally speaking, to a direct frontal attack against strong, hostile positions fully manned by a determined enemy."

"By nightfall of the 29th, the First Army line was approximately Bois de la Cote Lemont—Nantillois—Apremont—southwest across the Argonne. Many divisions, especially those in the center that were subjected to cross-fire of artillery, had suffered heavily. The severe fighting, the nature of the terrain over which they attacked, and the fog and darkness sorely tried even our best divisions. On the night of the 29th, the 37th and 79th Divisions were relieved by the 32d and 3d Divisions, respectively, and on the following night the 1st Division relieved the 35th Division."

"The critical problem during the first few days of the battle was the restoration of communications over 'no man's land'. There were but four roads available across this deep zone, and the violent artillery fire of the previous period of the war had virtually destroyed them. The spongy soil and the lack of material increased the difficulty. But the splendid work of our engineers and pioneers soon made possible the movement of the troops, artillery and supplies most needed. By the afternoon of the 27th, all the divisional artillery, except a few batteries of heavy guns, had effected a passage and was supporting the infantry action."

"At 5:30 a. m. on October 4, the general attack was renewed. The enemy divisions on the front from Fresnes-en-Woevre to the Argonne had increased from 10 in first line to 16, and included some of his best divisions. The fighting was desperate, and only small advances were realized, except by the 1st Division on the right of the First Corps. By evening of October 5, the line was approximately Bois de la Cote Lemont—Bois de Fays—Gesnes—Hill 240—Fleville—Chehery, southwest through the Argonne."

"It was especially desirable to drive the enemy from his commanding positions on the heights east of the Meuse, but it was even more important that we should force him to use his troops there and weaken his tenacious hold on positions in our immediate front. The further stabilization of the new St. Mihiel line permitted the withdrawal of certain divisions for the extension of the Meuse-Argonne operation to the east bank of the Meuse River."

"On the 7th the First Corps, with the 82d Division added, launched a strong attack northwest toward Cornay, to draw attention from the movement east of the Meuse and at the same time outflank the German position in the Argonne. The following day the Seventeenth French Corps,¹ Maj. Gen. Claudel commanding, initiated its attack east of the Meuse against the exact point on which the German armies must pivot in order to withdraw from northern France. The troops encountered elaborate fortifications and stubborn resistance, but by nightfall had realized an advance of 6 kilometers to a line well within the Bois de Consenvoye, and including the villages of Beaumont and Haumont. Continuous fighting was maintained along our entire battle front, with especial success on the extreme left, where the capture of the greater part of the Argonne Forest was completed. The enemy contested every foot of ground on our front in order to make more rapid retirements farther west and withdraw his forces from northern France before the interruption of his railroad communications through Sedan."

"Local attacks of the First Army were continued in order particularly to adjust positions preparatory to a renewed general assault. The 1st and 5th Divisions were relieved by the 42d and 80th Divisions, which were now fresh. An attack along the whole front was made on October 14. The resistance encountered was stubborn, but the stronghold on Cote Dame Marie was captured and the Hindenburg Line was broken. Cunel and Romagne-sous-Montfaucon were taken and the line advanced 2 kilometers north of Sommerance. A maximum advance of 17 kilometers had been made since September 26 and the enemy had been forced to throw into the fight a total of 15 reserve divisions."

"During the remainder of the month, important local operations were carried out which involved desperate fighting. The First Corps, Maj. Gen. Dickman commanding, advanced through Grandpre; the Fifth Corps, Maj. Gen. Charles P. Summerall commanding, captured the Bois de Bantheville; the Third Corps, Maj. Gen. John L. Hines commanding, completed the occupation of Cunel Heights; and the Seventeenth French Corps drove the enemy from the main ridge south of La Grande Montagne. Particularly heavy fighting occurred east of the Meuse on October 18, and in the further penetration of the Kriemhilde-Stellung on October 23."

"Summarizing the material results which had been attained by the First Army by the end of October, we had met an increasing number of Germany's best divisions, rising from 20 in line and reserve on September 26, to 31 on October 31; the enemy's elaborately prepared positions, including the Hindenburg Line, in our front had been broken; the almost impassable Argonne Forest was in our hands; an advance of 21 kilometers had been effected; 18,600 prisoners, 370 cannon, 1,000 machine guns, and a mass of material captured; and the great railway artery through Carignan to Sedan was now seriously threatened."

"The demands of incessant battle which had been maintained day by day for more than a month had compelled our divisions to fight to the limit of their capacity. Combat troops were held in line and pushed to the attack until deemed incapable of further effort because of casualties or exhaustion; artillery once engaged was seldom withdrawn and many batteries fought until practically all the animals were casualties and the guns were towed out of line by motor trucks. The American soldier had shown unrivaled fortitude in this continuous fighting during most inclement weather and under many disadvantages of position. Through experience, the Army had developed into a powerful and smooth-running machine, and there was a supreme confidence in our ability to carry through the task successfully."

"While the high pressure of these dogged attacks was a great strain on our troops, it was calamitous to the enemy. His divisions had been thrown into confusion by our furious assaults, and his morale had been reduced until his will to resist had well-nigh reached the breaking point. Once a German division was engaged in the fight, it became practically impossible to effect its relief. The enemy was forced to meet the constantly recurring crises by breaking up tactical organizations and sending hurried detachments to widely separated portions of the field."

"Every member of the American Expeditionary Forces, from the front line to the base ports, was straining every nerve. Magnificent efforts were exerted by the entire Services of Supply to meet the enormous demands made on it. Obstacles which seemed insurmountable were overcome daily in expediting the movements of replacements, ammunition and supplies to the front, and of sick and wounded to the rear. It was this spirit of determination animating every American soldier that made it impossible for the enemy to maintain the struggle until 1919."

"The detailed plans for the operations of the Allied Armies on the western front changed from time to time during the course of this great battle, but the mission of the First American Army to cut the great Carignan-Sedan-Mezieres Railroad remained unchanged. Marshal Foch coordinated the operations along the entire front, continuing persistently and unceasingly the attacks by all Allied Armies; the Belgian Army, with a French Army and two American divisions, advancing eastward; the British Armies and two American divisions, with the First French Army on their right, toward the region north of Givet; the First American Army and Fourth French Army, toward Sedan and Mezieres."

"On the 21st, my instructions were issued to the First Army to prepare thoroughly for a general attack on October 28, that would be decisive if possible. In order that the attack of the First Army and that of the Fourth French Army on its left should be simultaneous, our attack was delayed until November 1. The immediate purpose of the First Army was to take Buzancy and the heights of Barricourt, to turn the forest north of Grandpre, and to establish contact with the Fourth French Army near Boult-aux-Bois. The Army was directed to carry the heights of Barricourt by nightfall of the first day and then to exploit this success by advancing its left to Boult-aux-Bois in preparation for the drive toward Sedan. By strenuous effort, all available artillery had been moved well forward to the heights previously occupied by the enemy, from which it could fully cover and support the initial advance of the Infantry."

"On this occasion and for the first time, the Army prepared for its attack under normal conditions. We held the front of attack and were not under the necessity of taking over a new front, with its manifold installations and services. Our own personnel handled the communications, dumps, telegraph lines, and water service; our divisions were either on the line or close in rear; the French artillery, aviation, and technical troops which had previously made up our deficiencies had been largely replaced by our own organizations; and our army, corps, and divisional staffs were by actual experience second to none."

"On the morning of November 1, three Army corps were in line between the Meuse River and the Bois de Bourgogne. On the right the Third Corps had the 5th and 90th Divisions; the Fifth Corps occupied the center of the line, with the 89th and 2d Divisions, and was to be the wedge of the attack on the first day; and on the left the First Corps deployed the 80th, 77th, and 78th Divisions."

"Preceded by two hours of violent artillery preparation, the Infantry advanced, closely followed by 'accompanying guns'. The Artillery acquitted itself magnificently, the barrages being so well coordinated and so dense that the enemy was overwhelmed and quickly submerged by the rapid onslaught of the Infantry. By nightfall the Fifth Corps, in the center, had realized an advance of almost 9 kilometers to the Bois de la Folie, and had completed the capture of the heights of Barricourt, while the Third Corps, on the right, had captured Aincreville and Andevanne. Our troops had broken through the enemy's last defense, captured his artillery positions, and had precipitated a retreat of the German forces about to be isolated in the forest north of Grandpre. On the 2d and 3d, we advanced rapidly against heavy fighting on the fronts of the right and center corps; to the left the troops of the First Corps hurried forward in pursuit, some by motor trucks, while the Artillery pressed along the country roads close behind. Our heavy artillery was skillfully brought into position to fire upon the Carignan-Sedan Railroad and the junctions at Longuyon and Conflans. By the evening of the 4th, our troops had reached La Neuville, opposite Stenay, and had swept through the great Forêt de Dieulet, reaching the outskirts of Beaumont, while on the left we were 8 kilometers north of Boult-aux-Bois."

"The following day the advance continued toward Sedan with increasing swiftness. The Third Corps, turning eastward, crossed the Meuse in a brilliant operation by the 5th Division, driving the enemy from the heights of Dun-sur-Meuse and forcing a general withdrawal from the strong positions he had so long held on the hills north of Verdun."

"By the 7th, the right of the Third Corps had exploited its river crossing to a distance of 10 kilometers east of the Meuse, completely ejecting the enemy from the wooded heights and driving him out into the swampy plain of the Woevre; the Fifth and First Corps had reached the line of the Meuse River along their respective fronts and the left of the latter corps held the heights dominating Sedan, the strategical goal of the Meuse-Argonne operation, 41 kilometers from our point of departure on November 1. We had cut the enemy's main line of communications. Recognizing that nothing but a cessation of hostilities could save his armies from complete disaster, he appealed for an immediate armistice on November 6."

Pending the Armistice negotiations, the Allies vigorously continued the offensive, the American First Army pressing forward on its front.

"Between the 7th and 10th of November, the Third Corps continued its advance eastward to Remoiville, while the Seventeenth French Corps¹ on its right, with the 79th, 26th, and 81st American Divisions, and 2 French divisions, drove the enemy from his final foothold on the heights east of the Meuse. On the night of the 10th-11th and the morning of the 11th, the Fifth Corps forced a crossing of the Meuse east of Beaumont and gained the commanding heights within the reentrant of the river, thus completing our control of the Meuse River line. At 6 a. m. on the 11th, notification was received from Marshal Foch's headquarters that the Armistice had been signed and that hostilities would cease at 11 a. m. Preparatory measures had already been taken to insure the prompt transmission to the troops of the announcement of an Armistice. However, the advance east of Beaumont on the morning of the 11th had been so rapid and communication across the river was so difficult that there was some fighting on isolated portions of that front after 11 a. m."

"Between September 26 and November 11, 22 American and 4 French divisions, on the front extending from southeast of Verdun to the Argonne Forest, had engaged and decisively beaten 47 different German divisions, representing 25 per cent of the enemy's entire divisional strength on the western front. Of these enemy divisions, 20 had been drawn from the French front and 1 from the British front. Of the 22 American divisions, 12 had at different times during this period been engaged on fronts other than our own. The First Army suffered a loss of about 117,000 in killed and wounded. It captured 26,000 prisoners, 847 cannon, 3,000 machine guns, and large quantities of material."

The American First Army was under the direct command of General Pershing, holding until October 12 the entire front from Port-sur-Seille, east of the Moselle River, to the Argonne Forest. The strength of the First Army reached 1,031,000 men, including 135,000 French. On October 12, the portion of the line from Fresnes-en-Woevre, southeast of Verdun, to Port-sur-Seille was transferred to the newly constituted Second Army, Lt. Gen. Robert L. Bullard commanding, and preparations were begun for the extension of operations in the direction of Briey and Metz. On October 16, the command of the First Army was transferred to Lt. Gen. Hunter Liggett, with General Pershing in supreme command of the two American armies. While the First Army was driving towards the Meuse River along its entire line, general plans were prepared for the further employment of the American forces in an advance between the Meuse and the Moselle, to be directed toward Longwy by the First Army, with the Second Army assuming the offensive toward the Briey Iron Basin. Orders directing the preparatory local operations involved in this enterprise were issued on November 5.

On November 9, in accordance with Marshal Foch's instructions to press the enemy all along the line, orders were issued for the American Second Army to advance along its entire front. In this attack, continuing during the last three days of hostilities, the Second Army, with the limited number of troops at its disposal, made very creditable gains against stiff resistance offered by the enemy. Meanwhile, on November 6 Marshal Foch requested that 6 American divisions be held in readiness to assist in a French attack to the eastward in the direction of Chateau-Salins. The plan was agreed to, but with the provision that the American troops should be employed under the direction of the commanding general, Second Army. This combined attack was to be launched on November 14, and the movement of the American divisions had started on November 11.

During the period of the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, American divisions also participated in important attacks on other portions of the front. In the British area, the American Second Corps, Maj. Gen. Read commanding, with the 27th and 30th Divisions, took an important part in successful attacks at Le Cateau on September 29 and October 1, and in later actions from October 6 to 19. The 2d and 36th Divisions participated in the advance of the French Fourth Army between Reims and the Argonne Forest. The 2d Division, entering the line on October 2, distinguished itself by capturing the wooded heights of Blanc Mont, the key point of the German position, repulsing violent counter-attacks, and then carrying its lines into the village of St. Etienne. On October 10, the 36th Division relieved the 2d Division in the line, advancing with the French until October 27. Two American divisions, the 37th and 91st, were sent to assist the French Sixth Army in Belgium, where slow progress was being made. These divisions entered the line on October 30, making successful attacks.

By the Armistice, 42 American divisions had arrived in France and 29 were at the front. The total number of American troops that reached the battle zone was 1,390,000, or roughly two out of three in the A. E. F. The shortage of replacements for the divisions at the front in the fall of 1918 made it necessary to strip a number of the newly arrived divisions for this purpose. As a further measure to meet the situation, the authorized strength of divisions was reduced in October by 4,000 men. At the Armistice, the Allied forces in France were composed as follows: French, 40 per cent; Belgian, 3 per cent; British, 27 per cent; American, 30 per cent. The American forces would soon have exceeded the French. The portions of the front line held by the respective armies were as follows: French, 355 kilometers; Belgian, 40 kilometers; British, 113 kilometers; American, 134 kilometers. The total advance in battle by American divisions was 485 miles, or an average of 17 miles per division. The American Army captured altogether 63,000 prisoners, 1,378 pieces of artillery, 708 trench mortars and 9,650 machine guns.

American troops also participated in other theaters of the war. Largely for moral effect, the 332d Infantry Regiment and some medical and auxiliary troops were sent to Italy in July, 1918. These troops participated in the Italian offensive of October-November. In the summer of 1918, an Allied expedition was sent to northern Russia, with bases at Murmansk and Archangel, to guard the ports and Allied supplies and to assist the anti-Bolshevist groups in this region. The American force, comprising the 339th Infantry Regiment and some engineer and medical troops, arrived on September 4, reporting to the British commander of the expedition. In April, 1919, two companies of railway troops were added to the American force. There was a series of minor engagements with the Bolsheviks. The American troops were mostly withdrawn in June, 1919, a few engineers remaining until September.

In the summer of 1918, an Allied expedition, consisting mostly of Japanese and American contingents, was sent to Siberia via Vladivostok, for the purpose of assisting the Czecho-Slovak army and of aiding the loyalist Russians. The Czecho-Slovak army, which had been obliged to withdraw from European Russia after the treaty of peace with Germany, was engaged in fighting forces composed of Bolsheviks and German prisoners of war. The American troops, comprising altogether about 10,000 men, arrived in several contingents in August-September, 1918. Minor engagements with Bolshevik forces occurred during the year 1919. The American troops were withdrawn January-March, 1920. The American Expeditionary Forces in Siberia were not a part of the A. E. F. in Europe.

In accordance with the terms of the Armistice, the Allies were to occupy all German territory west of the Rhine, with bridgeheads of 30 kilometers radius at Cologne, Coblenz and Mayence. The zone assigned to the American command was the bridgehead of Coblenz and the district of Treves. Plans had been made before the Armistice to organize a Third Army, and on November 14 this army was designated as the American Army of Occupation. The Allied armies followed the retreating German armies, crossing the line into Germany on December 1. The American Army of Occupation at its maximum in February, 1919, numbered 262,259. With the return of the troops to the United States, the American Forces in Germany, as they were now called, were greatly reduced, numbering only 11,066 on October 1, 1919. In order to release the men enlisted or drafted for the emergency, recruiting was conducted in the United States for the A. F. in G. On June 30, 1920, the strength of the A. F. in G. was 16,150. After peace with Germany was formally declared in July, 1921, the A. F. in G. were reduced to about 1,200 and were finally withdrawn early in 1923.

The demobilization of soldiers in the camps in the United States was started immediately after the Armistice and was carried out as rapidly as possible. The return movement of the A. E. F. was also begun promptly, the monthly shipments growing as the transport fleet was expanded by conversion of cargo vessels and reaching a peak of over 360,000 in June, 1919. Demobilization was substantially completed by September 30, 1919, under instructions to discharge by that date all men enlisted or inducted for the emergency, unless definitely determined in the individual case that his services were further required. By December 31, 1919, practically all emergency personnel had been released from service. Recruiting for the Army was resumed on March 1, 1919, enlistments being accepted for one and three year periods. Total enlistments to December 31, 1919, numbered 165,728, consisting for the greater part of reenlistments of demobilized soldiers. The strength of the Army on December 31, 1919, was 18,974 officers and 204,892 enlisted men. Pending legislation for the reorganization of the Army on a peacetime basis, the building up of the required increase in the permanent officer personnel was delayed and it was necessary to retain a considerable number of emergency officers. A large post-war Officers Reserve Corps was built up, mainly from discharged emergency officers.

The World War statistics of deaths in the U. S. Army are as follows: (1) in the United States and its possessions—disease 38,817, accident or other cause 3,413, total 42,230; (2) in the A. E. F., including a few in Siberia—battle 50,510, disease 23,953, accident or other cause 3,363, total 77,826; grand total 120,056. Battle casualties in the A. E. F., including Siberia: killed in action 37,568; died of wounds 12,942; wounds not mortal 193,663; prisoners of war 4,432. These statistics do not include the Marine brigade in the A. E. F.

Under the original plan, divisional numbers 1 to 25 were allotted to the Regular Army, 26 to 75 to the National Guard and 76 upwards to the National Army. The 9th to 20th Divisions, however, which were organized in the summer and early fall of 1918, received each only a few units of the Regular Army and were made up mostly of drafted men.

The organization of the 95th to 97th Divisions was started in the fall of 1918, but not completed. The 94th and the 98th to 100th Divisions were never actually organized.

CHAPTER III

THE U. S. NAVY IN THE WAR

The war caused a vast expansion of the Navy, although proportionally not so great as in the case of the Army. The Navy was charged with large and important tasks—notably the operations in the war zone in conjunction with the Allies, the transport of troops and supplies for the Army overseas, the protection of American shipping generally, and the patrol of our coasts. The number of vessels of all classes commissioned in the Navy grew from 344 on April 6, 1917, to 2,202 at the Armistice. The total officer and enlisted personnel of the Navy, exclusive of the Marine Corps, increased from 59,088 on active duty January 1, 1917, to 532,198 November 11, 1918, including the Coast Guard at the latter date, and counting a few reserves not on active duty. The total number who served on active duty in the Navy, including the Coast Guard, at any time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, was 595,436. The funds provided for the Navy for the period from April 1, 1917, to June 30, 1919, amounted to total $3,357,993,878, from which deducting $375,598,947 estimated ordinary cost, leaves $2,982,394,930 extra war cost.

Navy preparedness had been actively promoted during the period preceding the entrance of the United States into the war. The Act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, especially marked an important advance. This Act approved a three-year program of ship construction, authorized a considerable increase in the enlisted strength of the Regular Navy, placed the officer quota upon a percentage of the enlisted strength instead of a strict numerical limit, established a Naval Reserve Force on an effective basis, increased the serviceability of the Naval Militia by providing for enrollment as National Naval Volunteers, and authorized the transfer in time of emergency of vessels, stations and personnel of the Lighthouse Service to the service and jurisdiction of the Navy Department.

The permanent authorized strength of the Regular Navy was increased during the war by successive steps to 131,485 enlisted men, plus 6,000 apprentice seamen. In addition, large temporary increases were authorized. The maximum enlisted strength, in October, 1918, was 218,251. The problem of providing officers was very difficult. In addition to the increase in the permanent officer quotas, temporary increases were authorized in grades up to lieutenant, later to lieutenant-commander, inclusive. Officers of the regular service were very generally promoted to higher grades, permanent or temporary. By successive steps prior to the war, the body of midshipmen at the Naval Academy was more than doubled, and the number of enlisted men to be admitted was raised to 100 annually. In the emergency, the class of 1917 was graduated in March, 1917, the class of 1918 in June, 1917, and three-year classes also in June, 1918, and in June, 1919, after which the four-year course was resumed. There were approximately 600 graduates from March, 1917, to June, 1918, inclusive. The next important source of officer material was the warrant officers of the Regular Navy, who were practically all advanced to temporary commissioned rank. Enlisted men, as the result of selective examinations, were appointed as temporary warrant officers, many later advancing to commissioned rank, and a large number were commissioned direct from the enlisted ranks. In order further to supply the requirements, five successive classes of brief, intensive courses were conducted at the Naval Academy for selected reserve officers, the fifth class extending beyond the date of the Armistice. The graduates of these classes were given temporary commissions in the Regular Navy—total, 1,730 line officers and 200 staff officers. On November 11, 1918, there were in the Regular Navy 5,827 line officers in commissioned grades, permanent and temporary, from sources as follows: officers of the regular service 2,605; reserve officers 1,571; warrant officers 898; enlisted men 753. All line officers in grade of lieutenant commander and higher were officers who had been in the Regular Navy on April 6, 1917. The additional medical officers and technical staff corps were obtained largely from the Reserve Force. Very few officers were appointed in the Regular Navy direct from civil life. The total number of officers in the Regular Navy on April 6, 1917, was 4,366, including 3,138 commissioned and 1,228 warrant. The total number on November 11, 1918, was 10,489: (1) in permanent grades—4,237 commissioned and 62 warrant; (2) in temporary grades—4,211 commissioned and 1,979 warrant.

The Naval Reserve Force was created by the Act of August 29, 1916, there having been previously only a small reserve composed of former members of the regular service. Six classes were established in the Reserve Force: (1) Fleet Naval Reserve for former members of the regular service; (2) Naval Reserve for men of the seagoing profession; (3) Naval Auxiliary Reserve for men employed on ships found suitable for use as naval auxiliaries in case of war; (4) Naval Coast Defense Reserve for special service in connection with the coast defense; (5) Naval Reserve Flying Corps for aviation service; (6) Volunteer Naval Reserve open to anyone eligible for membership in any other class of the Reserve Force. Enrollments in the Reserve Force started in December, 1916. The numbers increased rapidly during the war, reaching 277,945 enlisted men on November 11, 1918, of whom all but a few were in active service. To a large extent, enlistment in the Regular Navy or enrollment in the Reserve Force were merely alternative forms of joining the Navy for war service. To July 1, 1918, some 1,220 medical and dental students were enrolled in the Reserve Force and placed on inactive duty status in order to complete their studies.

In the first stress, it was necessary to enroll a few officers in the Reserve Force to carry on the mobilization and preparatory work, but the enrollment of officers was stopped within three months after the declaration of war, with the exception of seagoing officers of merchant ships and officers for professional or technical duties. All officers of the combatant classes were thereafter appointed from the enlisted force after training and examination. Officer material schools were conducted in all of the districts and officer training was promoted at naval stations and on naval vessels. The officers and crews of American merchant vessels taken over by the Navy were enrolled in so far as possible in the Reserve Force. Class 3 of the Reserve Force was used not only for the personnel of the naval auxiliary ships, but also for the merchant ships of the cargo service manned by the Navy. The visible supply of officers for ships of the merchant type being far below the requirements, schools were conducted both for deck and engineering officers, producing a high grade of officers of permanent value to the American merchant marine. The total number of officers in the Reserve Force on November 11, 1918, was 21,985, of whom 20,811 were in active service, including 2,414 warrant officers. To the date of the Armistice, 11,000 enlisted men had been appointed as officers. The officer training was then in full swing, and the current courses were carried to completion and commissions issued. The maximum number of officers in the Reserve Force thereby reached nearly 30,000, but there was no increase in the number in active service after the Armistice.

The Naval Militia had been placed on an effective Federal basis by the Act of February 16, 1914. As militia, however, it was available only for limited duty, such as to repel invasion. The Act of August 29, 1916, provided for enrollment of the members of the Naval Militia as National Naval Volunteers, thus making them available for any emergency. The Naval Militia was promptly mobilized on April 6, 1917. There were mustered into Federal service, comprising only those who enrolled as National Naval Volunteers, 666 officers and 9,162 enlisted men, not including the Marine Corps branch. Enrollments continued during the following year, the recruits being taken at once into active service. By the Act of July 1, 1918, the National Naval Volunteers, then numbering 776 officers and 14,067 enlisted men in confirmed rank and rating, were incorporated into the Naval Reserve Force.

By the Act of August 31, 1918, the selective draft was extended to the Navy and Marine Corps. In anticipation thereof, enlistments and enrollments had been stopped on August 8, except in the case of bona-fide applications pending on that date. Under the regulations, the Navy was to receive regular quotas from the draft, beginning October 1, 1918. In view, however, of the congestion at the training camps and stations and of the large number of reservists awaiting call to active duty, the Navy had no occasion to take its quota of "run of the draft", but made calls only for limited numbers of men of special qualifications. The total inductions into the Navy numbered 12,493, consisting mostly of voluntary inductions, including the members of the naval units of the Students Army Training Corps.

The number of female nurses in the Naval service increased from 160 nurses, U. S. Navy, on April 6, 1917, to a total of 1,386 in active service on November 11, 1918, comprising 280 nurses, U. S. Navy, 503 reserve nurses, U. S. Navy, and 603 nurses, Naval Reserve Force. An important factor in securing the greatly increased clerical force was the enrollment of women as yeomen for service at Navy yards and stations. The total enrollment of yeomen (F) was over 11,000 and the maximum on duty about 8,000.

The Act of January 28, 1915, provided that the Coast Guard should "operate under the Treasury Department in time of peace, and operate as a part of the Navy . . . in time of war, or when the President may so direct". Upon the declaration of war, on April 6, 1917, the Coast Guard passed from the Treasury Department to the Navy. The personnel on that date comprised 229 commissioned officers, 20 cadets, 404 warrant officers and 3,478 enlisted men. The Coast Guard operated 22 cruising cutters, 26 harbor cutters and 270 stations along the seacoast and the Great Lakes. During the war, the service, in addition to performing its usual duties, participated in the work of the Navy, especially in patrolling the coasts. The telephone and telegraph lines from station to station formed a main part of the communications system along the coast. Six Coast Guard cutters served with the American naval forces in the war zone. Under the Act of July 1, 1918, officers of the Coast Guard were temporarily advanced to ranks, not above lieutenant commander, corresponding to naval officers with the same length of service, these temporary commissions to be vacated not later than six months after the termination of the present emergency. The strength of the Coast Guard on November 11, 1918, was 236 commissioned officers, 35 cadets, 452 warrant officers and 5,705 enlisted men. The Coast Guard was returned to the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department by Executive Order, August 28, 1919.

The Act of August 29, 1916, authorized the President in time of emergency to transfer to the service and jurisdiction of the Navy Department, or of the War Department, vessels, equipment, stations and personnel of the Lighthouse Service. By Executive Order, April 11, 1917, there were transferred to the jurisdiction of the War Department 30 lighthouse tenders and to the jurisdiction of the Navy Department 15 tenders, 4 light vessels and 21 light stations. The tenders at first placed under the War Department were transferred on July 1, 1917, to the Navy Department. On January 31, 1918, a new lighthouse tender was likewise transferred to the Navy Department, making a total of 50 vessels. The total personnel transferred numbered 1,132, constituting about one-fifth of the Lighthouse Service. In addition to the personnel directly transferred, the superintendents and certain other officials of the lighthouse districts, numbering altogether 46, reported to the naval authorities and rendered service in coordinating the naval and lighthouse duties of the transferred units. Although under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, the status of the transferred personnel was not definitely defined and they were not held to be members of the naval service. The transferred units, in addition to carrying on their usual functions, also performed duties for the Navy, consisting principally of work on submarine nets and buoyage in connection therewith, patrol and watch service, and drill in mine-laying, for which many of the tenders were already equipped. The transferred vessels, stations and personnel were returned to the jurisdiction of the Lighthouse Service July 1, 1919.

The Act of May 22, 1917, authorized the President in time of emergency to transfer to the service and jurisdiction of the War Department, or of the Navy Department, vessels, equipment, stations and personnel of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. By Executive Order, September 24, 1917, three vessels and by order of May 16, 1918, two additional vessels were transferred to the jurisdiction of the Navy Department. There were transferred to the Navy Department 42 commissioned officers, 10 other officers and 79 men, total 131, and to the War Department 25 commissioned officers, 26 other officers and 58 men, total 109, constituting altogether about 30 per cent of the entire personnel of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. The transferred personnel acquired a definite status by being commissioned or enlisted in the Army and Navy, respectively.

The naval service requires a well trained personnel. The rapid increase, therefore, presented a great training problem. The previous idea was that the Navy would be able to fill its needs largely by drawing on the experienced personnel of the merchant marine. In fact, however, the Navy was called upon to man hundreds of ships of the merchant type in addition to the strictly naval vessels. At the beginning of the war, there were four stations for training on shore. The capacity of these main training stations was increased from 6,000 to 65,000. Smaller training camps, also, were established in the districts, with combined capacity of 40,000. Over 200,000 men passed through the training stations. At the Armistice, the facilities built or projected had an aggregate capacity of 198,000, having in view a request by the Shipping Board for the training of 220,000 officers and men for the merchant fleet by the end of the year 1919. Besides the general training at the camps and stations, it was necessary to conduct special training in the many trades and technical services required in the Navy. Training schools for special branches, such as aviation, submarine chaser work and other duties, were conducted usually at the bases or other establishments of the respective services. Schools or special courses for naval training were established at a number of educational institutions and at several large industrial plants. In connection with the Students Army Training Corps in the fall of 1918, naval units or sections were established at 93 institutions, with total enrollment of 12,000, besides 4,000 at 90 educational institutions where there were no naval units or sections. For sea training, practically every naval vessel served, carrying a training contingent in addition to its regular complement. Even the destroyers in the war zone produced a steady turnover of nucleus crews for the new destroyers. Courses of instruction were conducted on all of the larger ships. This extensive training program on board ship was of course practicable only because the Navy was not under the pressure of actual combat with the enemy fleet.

There was, of course, an enormous growth during the war in shore establishments of the Navy—training stations, yards and docks, ordnance plants, aviation fields, supply depots, hospitals. The number of Navy yards and stations increased from 130 on January 1, 1917, to 482 on November 11, 1918, of which 54 were in foreign countries. The major part of naval ship construction and of ordnance production was done under contract in private plants. The Navy facilities, however, were greatly expanded, entailing a large increase in civilian employees as well as in Navy personnel.

The number of serviceable vessels of all classes commissioned in the Navy grew from 342 on April 6, 1917, to 2,035 at the Armistice, not including 969 yard craft. Vessels of the regular Navy at different dates were as follows:

Construction of capital ships was practically suspended during the war and efforts were concentrated largely on destroyers and other anti-submarine vessels. A remarkable record was made, nearly 500 vessels being completed for the Navy before the Armistice. The submarine chasers were 110-foot wooden vessels, designed for rapid construction. They rendered valuable service, both in American and in European waters. In addition to the number shown in the table, 100 chasers were built for the French government. The "Eagle" boats were steel fabricated vessels of type between the destroyers and the chasers. On January 17, 1918, an order was placed with the Ford company, which had volunteered to undertake this work, for 100 of these vessels, later increased by 12 for one of the Allies. At the Armistice, the plant was already beginning to turn out the completed vessels, and if the war had continued hundreds of them would have been produced.

The vessels taken over for temporary war service included 93 from other Government departments and hundreds from the Shipping Board and private owners. Altogether, nearly 1,600 vessels were converted by the Navy for war purposes, comprising all types from the largest ocean liners to small motor boats. The Navy, of course, had the power of commandeering vessels. A great many owners of pleasure craft turned them over free of charge to the Government for use during the war, often volunteering their own services therewith.

In addition to the regular warships, the Navy armed in one way or another 2,570 vessels, including 650 patrol boats, 1,600 American merchant ships equipped with batteries, and some British and French naval and merchant vessels. Naval gun crews were furnished to over 2,000 vessels. Guns and gunners were furnished to 395 American merchant vessels not commissioned in the Navy, some of which, however, were subsequently taken over into the Naval Overseas Transportation Service. Radio equipment was installed in some 3,775 vessels, naval and merchant, and nearly 5,000 Navy radio operators were provided for American merchant vessels.

The first demand for guns for arming merchant ships and naval auxiliaries was met from reserve stocks and by reducing the intermediate batteries of the warships. Production kept pace with requirements and at the Armistice was in full swing, reaching about 500 guns per month. The number of completed guns of all calibers delivered from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, was 3,478. Ammunition production also kept pace with requirements. The Navy mounted a number of 14-inch guns on railway mounts, five of which were actually used on the battle-front in France, being the most powerful mobile artillery in existence. The Navy was preparing to furnish 50 more of these guns when the Armistice intervened. A supply of 7-inch guns removed from the battleships due to a change in armament was utilized by installing them on tractor mounts. At the Armistice, 20 of these guns were ready and a regiment of Marines trained for service in France. A remarkable record was made in the manufacture of mines, the American production totaling 100,000, of which 85,000 were shipped abroad. At the Armistice, the production of mines for the Northern Barrage was completed, but was being continued for the proposed mine barrages in the Adriatic and in the Aegean Sea. The depth charge for attacks on submarines was greatly developed, the size being increased from 50 pounds to 300 pounds standard, with a 600 pound type also reaching quantity production at the Armistice. The production during the year was 28,000 of 300 pound charges and 500 of 600 pound charges. There was also developed the "Y" gun for firing depth charges, thereby greatly increasing the effectiveness of this weapon. Torpedo production reached 400 per month. There was also a large production of aircraft armament, including a non-recoil gun of 1½-inch and 2-inch calibre developed by the Navy, machine guns and bombs.

Naval aviation expanded greatly during the war. On April 6, 1917, the aviation service comprised only 43 officers and 209 men. By the spring of 1918, the plans were reaching fruition both in personnel and in production. On November 11, 1918, the naval aviation service, not including the Marine Corps, comprised 2,835 officers and 32,873 enlisted men, besides 10,579 of other ratings assigned to duty in connection with aviation. The aircraft equipment included 1,865 flying boats and seaplanes, 242 land planes, 15 dirigibles, 205 kite balloons and 10 free balloons. There were 51 aviation establishments—that is, stations, schools, et cetera, including 27 in Europe.

Apart from the operations in the war zone in conjunction with the Allies, the main functions of the Navy during the war were, broadly speaking, patrol and defense of the coasts of the United States, protection of American shipping generally, and transport of troops and supplies for the Army overseas.

The naval districts, numbering 15 of which 13 in continental United States, were greatly developed during the war. Under a policy of decentralization, the various naval activities on shore and in coastal waters were grouped as far as possible under the authority of the district commandants, including patrol and defense of the coast, communications, commandeering vessels, industrial developments, housing facilities and so on. The districts were further divided into sections, which served as bases for the patrol vessels assigned thereto.

An effective patrol was maintained, especially along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. The U. S. Navy thereby relieved the British, who had previously patrolled these waters in view of the vital importance of the American sources of supply and especially of the oil supplies from Mexico. Hundreds of vessels, mostly of small size, participated in this work, supplemented by air patrols and by shore stations, especially of the Coast Guard. Submarine nets were placed at the entrances to important ports. Mine-sweeping was regularly performed in order to insure safety along the traveled lanes. A far-reaching system of communications was developed, by extending the telegraph and telephone system connecting the Coast Guard stations and by radio communication with the patrol vessels.

In May, 1918, the enemy opened active submarine operations along the Atlantic coast of the United States, designed chiefly to divert American efforts. All counter measures were augmented and intensified. Convoys were conducted out of American ports for overseas. Greater precautions and defensive measures were taken also in connection with the coastwise shipping—by routing, escort, and air patrol. The enemy submarine operations off the coasts of the United States constituted only a minor incident of the war and were practically nullified by the counter measures.

Under Executive Order, April 6, 1917, all radio stations required for Government use were taken over by the Navy and all others closed, including 28 commercial stations and thousands of amateur sets. Radio communication was prohibited during the war, except by Army and Navy stations. The Navy previously owned 54 stations, took over 59 commercial stations, and during the war constructed 67 stations, including several high power stations for transoceanic communication. The great majority were ship-to-shore stations. The Navy also installed radio equipment on vessels, naval and merchant, and provided Navy radio operators for American merchant vessels. The radio service operated by the Navy developed into an extensive and efficient system. Commercial service was practically suspended on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, but was maintained elsewhere by the stations operated by the Navy. The Navy also handled the cable censorship.

The arming of American merchant ships against submarines started in March, 1917. All merchant ships of a certain size in the trans-Atlantic service were armed by the Navy, numbering 384 ships of 2,738,026 tons in addition to those operated by the Navy. These ships, making 1,832 trans-Atlantic trips while in armed guard status, sustained 227 attacks by submarines, of which 193 attacks were successfully repulsed and only 31 ships of 166,428 tons were sunk. The Navy took the lead in camouflage of vessels, or more properly "dazzle-painting", the effect being not invisibility but to render it difficult from a distance to determine the course of the vessel. To October 1, 1918, altogether 1,127 vessels of the Navy and of the merchant fleet were painted in accordance with designs prepared by the Navy. The convoy system for protection of merchant ships was effective principally in the war zone, but in large measure escort service started at the American ports, particularly for troop transports, and in lesser degree for vessels carrying cargo for the Army overseas and generally for the largest merchant ships. Convoys of small craft were taken overseas for the use of the Army and of the Allies.

One of the most important services of the Navy was in transporting troops and supplies overseas for the American Army. Slightly over one-half of the American troops were transported to Europe in British and other foreign ships, but Navy transports carried nearly all of those transported in American ships, constituting almost one-half. The total number of troops carried overseas in Navy transports was 911,047. The Navy transport fleet grew from practically nothing to 42 large ships at the date of the Armistice, the better part of this fleet consisting of 20 passenger liners from the German ships lying in American ports that were seized by the American Government upon entering the war. The transports were operated as part of the Cruiser and Transport Force, comprising also 24 cruisers and altogether 83 vessels, with total personnel 44,000. The troop transports were always escorted by warships, except a few of the fastest ships whose speed was sufficient protection, and not a single ship or life was lost en route to Europe, although a few ships were sunk on the return voyage, when the escort was necessarily not so effective on account of lack of available warships. The American Navy also largely furnished the escort for the British and other foreign ships transporting American troops. The return movement of the troops devolved almost entirely upon the Navy, the foreign ships being no longer available for this purpose. The transport fleet was augmented by a large number of cargo vessels converted by the Army and turned over to the Navy. After the Armistice, the Navy also utilized warships in this service in so far as possible, altogether 25 battleships and cruisers making one or more trips carrying troops. The shipment of troops reached a peak of 340,946 in June, 1919, exceeding the highest monthly record in the overseas movement. The number of ships then engaged in transporting troops was 115. To October 1, 1919, the Navy brought back to the United States 1,686,944, as compared to 258,423 in other ships.

Equally important was the cargo service. The American seagoing merchant marine prior to the war was very small, although there was a large and flourishing shipping in the coastwise and lake trade, which was restricted to American vessels. In the face of a world-wide shortage of shipping, it was necessary to build up a huge fleet for American requirements. Suitable vessels were diverted from the coastwise and lake shipping. Large increments were secured by the seizure of the German ships when the United States entered the war and by the requisitioning of Dutch ships in March, 1918. A big construction program was undertaken and began to reach large volume in 1918. Large amounts of tonnage were obtained also by chartering foreign vessels, especially Scandinavian and Japanese. The U. S. Shipping Board endeavored in so far as possible to serve American trade routes, but the Army and Navy requirements were imperative and absorbed the bulk of the ocean tonnage. A shortage of marine personnel early developed and the Navy was called upon for assistance. Beginning with a few ships, plans were arranged in cooperation with the Shipping Board and the War Department for the Navy to man all ships turned over for Navy purposes or for supply of the Army overseas, as well as other large vessels entering the war zone. For handling this growing cargo fleet, the Naval Overseas Transportation Service was established in January, 1918. The principal ports were New York, Newport News, and Baltimore. The cargo fleet grew by December, 1918, to 490 vessels of 3,800,000 deadweight tons, of which 378 vessels of 2,900,000 tons were in actual operation, the remainder being in process of being commissioned or under construction. The personnel comprised 4,150 officers and 28,047 enlisted men. The Navy carried overseas before the Armistice altogether 6,000,000 tons of cargo for the American forces and for the Allies. In pace with the return movement of the American forces, the cargo vessels were released by the Navy, nearly all having been turned back by the fall of 1919.

Even before the actual declaration of war, consultations were begun with the British and French naval authorities with a view to the most effective cooperation on the part of the American Navy. The American naval representative, Admiral William S. Sims, arrived in England on April 9, 1917. Admiral Sims, with headquarters in London, was placed in command of American naval forces assigned to the war zone, which were designated as the American Naval Forces Operating in European Waters. These forces, of course, worked in cooperation with the Allies and under British direction in so far as required for effective joint action. The Allies were in complete mastery with respect to the surface fleets, so that there was no occasion for the United States to send any large number of capital ships, which would only have increased the supply problem. The imperative need was for reinforcements in combating the submarines. The United States contributed as rapidly as possible all available vessels for this purpose. On January 1, 1918, American naval vessels in European waters numbered 113. By November 11, 1918, the number increased to 373, comprising 70 destroyers, 5 gunboats, 5 Coast Guard cutters, 120 submarine chasers, 27 converted yachts, 12 submarines, 10 mine-planters, 13 mine-sweepers, 8 battleships, 3 cruisers, supply ships and miscellaneous vessels. The personnel numbered 80,565. There were ultimately 15 important American naval bases in Europe, including several of large size.

When the United States entered the war, the submarine menace was extremely grave. Sinkings for the month of April, 1917, reached nearly 1,000,000 tons and the Allies were apparently unable to cope with the situation. They were patrolling the infested waters around the British Isles, but the number of patrol vessels was too limited and the area of operations too extensive to make the patrol very effective. The result was chiefly to cause the submarines to operate at a greater distance out at sea. A large part of the British destroyer force was required for duty with the Grand Fleet and was not available for the patrol duty, although all available vessels were impressed into this service.

The first division of American destroyers reached Queenstown, Ireland, on May 4, 1917, joining the British forces. By July, 1917, there were 34 American destroyers with tenders based on Queenstown, and 17 converted yachts and 9 mine-sweepers based on Bay of Biscay French ports to assist in protecting local convoys and in keeping the coast clear of mines. As more destroyers became available, they were assigned to Brest, the American force there growing to approximately the same size as at Queenstown. An American force, also, was based on Gibraltar, comprising a few older destroyers, small cruisers, gunboats, Coast Guard cutters and converted yachts, ultimately numbering 41 vessels. The Allied naval forces at Gibraltar consisted principally of British and American. The American vessels furnished the greater part of the ocean escort from this point as well as a large part of the Mediterranean escort.

Shortly after the entrance of the United States into the war, the convoy system was inaugurated—that is, forming a number of merchant vessels into a group, escorted by warships. The contribution of American destroyers and other escort vessels served to make this practicable. Started in June, 1917, the convoy system soon proved so successful that it was gradually extended until it applied to practically all Allied shipping. The protection of ships on the trans-Atlantic voyage, of course, depended upon the cruisers and larger warships. Convoys were formed mainly for passage through the infested submarine zone. The destroyers met the convoys at rendezvous just outside this zone and escorted them to European ports, and similarly convoys of outward bound vessels were formed at the ports. The patrol and escort service was very arduous for the small vessels engaged, requiring long periods at sea in all kinds of weather, meeting ships as far as 300 miles off shore. During 18 months of service, American vessels escorted altogether 18,653 ships, constituting 27% of the entire Atlantic convoy system, with only a small percentage of loss. The submarines feared the destroyers and usually kept away from the convoys, preferring to prey upon stray vessels. American escort vessels, however, engaged in 183 attacks on submarines, damaging 24 and at least 2 known to have been destroyed.

The work of the escort vessels was of course mainly defensive, withdrawing them from patrol duty. The convoy system caused a change in enemy submarine operations. The submarines, which had been operating for the most part two or three hundred miles off shore, now displayed greater activity close in, seeking to attack vessels after the convoys were broken up to proceed to the different ports.

This made it imperative to increase the patrol in coastal waters, all available small vessels and aircraft being impressed into this service. The great American contributions were in submarine chasers and in aircraft. Altogether, 135 submarine chasers were sent over for service in European waters. These vessels, armed with depth charges and equipped with sound-detection devices, which had by this time been developed to practical use by the U. S. Navy, proved to be very effective. One group of about 30, arriving in May, 1918, was based on Plymouth for operations in the English Channel. A second group, following shortly after, was transferred in August to Queenstown for operations in the Irish Sea. Meanwhile, a third group had been sent to Corfu to assist in the mobile barrage and patrol at the mouth of the Adriatic Sea, rendering this passage extremely hazardous. This group participated in the naval attack on the Austrian base at Durazzo on October 2, 1918. During the closing days of the war, a detachment of submarine chasers, en route to Europe by way of the Azores, was diverted to Gibraltar to operate against submarines returning to Germany after the Adriatic bases were closed by the surrender of Austria.

By arrangement with Portugal, the Azores Islands were utilized for an American naval base, serving double purpose as a base of operations against enemy submarines in this region and also as a half-way point and supply base for American vessels. It would have been impracticable to send across the large numbers of small vessels except for this base. An important service was rendered, also, in rescuing vessels in distress due to submarine attacks or to perils of the sea. The American naval vessels based on the Azores ultimately numbered 12, the main constituent being a detachment of 5 submarines sent in October, 1917. The policy was to utilize the submarines in areas comparatively free from Allied patrol vessels, in view of the extra hazard of being mistaken for enemy submarines. In January, 1918, however, another detachment of 7 submarines was sent to Ireland for patrol duty.

The first service unit of the American military and naval forces to land in Europe was a small naval aviation detachment in June, 1917. At the Armistice, the American naval air forces in Europe numbered 1,100 officers and 18,000 men, and the aircraft equipment comprised 400 planes, 50 kite balloons and 3 dirigibles. Altogether, 27 aviation bases were constructed, including several of great size. The American bases and stations extended along the coasts of Great Britain, Ireland, France and Italy. The main mission of the air forces was in anti-submarine operations, consisting of patrol duty and escort of vessels. Airplanes not only made many direct attacks, but also served by notifying the destroyers and submarine chasers of the presence of submarines. Even more important, the mere presence of aircraft compelled the submarines to remain submerged, thus greatly reducing their cruising periods and tending to nullify their operations.

During the later period, the air forces were turning their attention to bombing enemy naval objectives, particularly submarine bases. The largest project was the Northern Bombing Group, consisting of 8 squadrons, partly Marine Corps, based at points along the Flanders coast for bombing the German submarine bases in Belgium, particularly at Ostend, Zeebrugge and Bruges. The aircraft equipment consisted in part of Caproni planes from Italy. Active operations were begun on October 13, 1918, and eight bombing raids were made by October 27. Before the project reached a full working stage, the submarine bases were evacuated in consequence of the retreat of the German army from Belgium. The personnel of the Northern Bombing Group then worked with the British air forces until the Armistice.

The Navy Department had begun to study the problem of closing the northern exit of the North Sea even before the United States entered the war. The British considered the project impracticable, on account of the immense number of mines of the existing type that would be required. The Navy Department, however, developed a mine especially adapted for the purpose and finally convinced the British. By October, 1917, the preliminary plans were made and the manufacture of the mines begun. The total distance to be mined from the Orkney Islands to the coast of Norway was 270 miles, of which the British were to lay 80 miles. The manufacture of the mines and transportation across the Atlantic constituted a large undertaking. Two great mine bases were established on the east coast of Scotland, and merchant vessels were converted into mine-layers. The actual laying of the mines was begun in March, 1918. The American operations consisted of 13 expeditions at successive dates by 10 mine-layers, each expedition taking only 3 or 4 hours and laying 5,000 mines. The mine-layers were well protected by warships. By the Armistice, the "Northern Barrage" was nearly completed, the Americans having laid 56,000 mines and the British 14,000 mines of their type which required a larger number for a given distance. The project began to achieve results from the start and was increasingly effective as the line was extended. The barrage is credited with probably 6 submarines destroyed and a larger number damaged. Plans were under way to lay similar barrages at the entrance to the Adriatic and across the Aegean from Greece to the Island of Samos.

By the Armistice, the sinkings of Allied shipping had been reduced to a comparatively low point and the practically complete nullification of the submarines was presaged. The convoy system largely removed their prey, and the growing number of patrol vessels, equipped with sound detection services and depth charges, supplemented by the air patrol, greatly hampered their operations and increased the hazard. The passage through the English channel was increasingly dangerous for the submarines, and the closing of this exit was made completely effective early in 1918. The usual exit by the north was now being closed by the Northern Barrage, practically bottling up the submarines. Towards the end, the morale of the submarine crews sunk very low and they were unwilling to venture forth in the face of such extreme hazards.

By request, a division of 4 American battleships was sent to reinforce the British Grand Fleet, arriving at Scapa Flow on December 7, 1917, later augmented by a fifth battleship. This force functioned as an integral part of the Grand Fleet, participating in all of its maneuvers and operations and taking its turn in escorting the convoys between Scotland and Sweden. These warships also served as a protecting cordon for the American group engaged in laying the mine barrage in the North Sea. Another division of 3 American battleships was sent over in 1918 and based on Bere Haven, Ireland. This was to provide against the contingency of one or more of the fast and powerful German battle-cruisers slipping by the Grand Fleet for raiding in the Atlantic. The danger of such raids was greatly increased by the convoy system, concentrating a number of vessels in a group, and especially after the heavy shipment of troops from the United States started in the spring of 1918.

Navy chaplains, medical and dental officers, and enlisted men of the medical department served with the Marine Corps units in the American Expeditionary Forces. The Navy also made an important contribution to the A. E. F. in artillery. Five 14-inch guns on railway mounts, manned by Navy personnel, were furnished for use on the battle-front in France. These guns, having a range of over 25 miles, were the most powerful artillery on the Allied side. Two of the guns were in action with the French in the vicinity of Soissons from early in September, 1918. The most valuable service was during the latter part of October and until the Armistice, when all five guns served with the American Army in the Verdun region, taking an important part in bombarding the vital German railway system between Metz and Sedan. The naval railway batteries fired altogether 782 shots.

After the Armistice, the American naval forces in European waters were returned as rapidly as possible. The Navy, however, still had the big job of carrying supplies for the Army remaining in France and of transporting the soldiers home. Another important task was mine-sweeping, especially in the North Sea, where 62 American naval vessels were engaged in this hazardous work, besides 20 British trawlers manned by American naval crews. The mine-sweeping in the North Sea was completed by September, 1919. About 100 vessels were sent over or secured abroad by the U. S. Navy subsequent to the Armistice, although reductions proceeded more rapidly than such increments. By October 1, 1919, the American naval forces in European waters were reduced to 108 vessels, with personnel of 13,715, and 68 of these vessels were either on the way home or scheduled for early return. American naval forces were retained for a considerable period in the Adriatic and in Turkish waters for carrying out the terms of the Armistice and for the maintenance of peace in these troubled regions. The American Navy also performed a valuable service in carrying relief supplies to the stricken countries of Europe and to other parts of the world.

The Navy was demobilized apace, the temporary vessels being turned back and the Navy personnel released as rapidly as possible consistent with the large tasks remaining to be performed after the Armistice and with the great increase in the permanent fleet. By November 1, 1919, a total of 411,675 enlisted men and 31,227 officers were released. The Reserve Force personnel in general were simply released from active duty status, not discharged. By November 1, 1919, only 1,800 officers and 4,700 enlisted men of the Reserve Force remained on active duty. Although enlistment for the duration of the war was not authorized until January 11, 1918, and all previous enlistments were for the regular term of 4 years, the privilege of discharge was extended to all wartime enlistments, regarding February 3, 1917, as the initial date. Navy recruiting was actively resumed on December 3, 1918, for 2, 3, and 4 year periods. To November 1, 1919, the figures showed 60,024 new enlistments, 12,762 reenlistments, 17,718 extensions and 1,989 transfers from the Reserve Force. The total forces on December 1, 1919, numbered 132,000. The problem of officers was especially difficult, the number of permanent officers at the date of the Armistice being only one-half of the requirements of the increased Navy. This made it necessary to retain a large number of reserve and temporary officers beyond the period of active demobilization.

Navy casualties, not including the Coast Guard, for the period from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, as follows:

	Officers	Enlisted
Deaths due to enemy action:
On land	2	19
At sea	35	380
Lost at sea.....	41	416
Deaths from other causes.....	368	6,073
Total	446	6,888

Coast Guard deaths for the same period as follows:

	Officers	Enlisted
Due to enemy action (at sea).....	11	100
Result of accident, collision, drowning, etc.....	1	21
From natural causes.....	3	57
Total	15	178

The number of wounds not mortal received in action with the enemy is negligible in the case of the Navy.

The Navy suffered the following ship casualties due to enemy action:

	By submarines	By mines
Naval vessels:
Sunk	1 destroyer 1 converted yacht 1 Coast Guard cutter	1 cruiser
Damaged	1 destroyer 1 converted yacht	1 battleship
Transports:
Sunk	2 ships
Damaged	1 ship
N. O. T. S. vessels:
Sunk	5 ships	2 ships
Damaged	1 ship

Also, 1 motor launch sunk by enemy shore batteries.

One submarine chaser, being mistaken as enemy, was sunk with gunfire by an armed merchant ship. One submarine chaser and one trawler were sunk and one submarine chaser damaged by mines in mine-sweeping operations in the North Sea.

Navy ship casualties during the war period from perils of the sea, fire, explosion, collision and miscellaneous causes, as follows:

Naval vessels:
Sunk or otherwise destroyed—1 gunboat, 1 destroyer, 4 submarines, 2 Coast Guard cutters, 1 converted yacht, 10 submarine chasers, 1 large fuel ship, and 31 miscellaneous vessels (mostly small patrol vessels).
Damaged—2 destroyers, 1 converted yacht, 2 submarine chasers, and 5 small patrol vessels.
Transports:
Sunk or otherwise destroyed—1 ship.
Damaged—2 ships.
N. O. T. S. vessels:
Sunk or otherwise destroyed—8 ships.
Damaged—4 ships.

Ship casualties of American merchant vessels due to enemy action as follows:

	By raiders	By submarines	By mines
Before April 6, 1917—
Sunk	1 vessel (3,374 tons)	15 vessels (55,480 tons)	5 vessels (11,570 tons)
Damaged		3 vessels (14,194 tons)	3 vessels (15,792 tons)
After April 6, 1917—
Sunk	7 vessels) (5,052 tons)	114 vessels (256,220 tons)	8 vessels (27,542 tons)
Damaged		16 vessels (60,268 tons)	3 vessels (22,988 tons)

U. S. NAVY SHIPS—OUTLINE OF SERVICE

The following list does not comprise all vessels of the U. S. Navy during the war period, but only those performing service covered by the provisions governing the award of clasps with the Victory Medal, including non-Navy ships carrying gun crews furnished by the Navy, as indicated by clasp "Armed guard". The provisions as to clasps, applicable to service on ships, are as follows:

- (a) Transport.—Regularly attached to a transport or cargo vessel for one voyage across the North Atlantic between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918.
- (b) Escort.—Similar to (a).
- (c) Armed guard.—Similar to (a).
- (d) Grand Fleet.—Regularly attached to any vessel forming part of the Grand Fleet between December 9, 1917, and November 11, 1918.
- (e) Patrol.—For service on the high seas on such duty east of the thirty-seventh meridian and north of the Equator, between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and on the high seas of the Atlantic Ocean north of the Equator between May 25, 1918, and November 11, 1918.
(Note:—May 25, 1918, is the date of the extension of enemy submarine operations to the western Atlantic.)
- (f) Submarine.—Similar to (e).
- (g) Destroyer.—Similar to (e).
- (j) White Sea.—For service on any vessel which made a Russian port during such service from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918.
- (k) Asiatic.—For service on any vessel which made a Siberian port during such service from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918.
- (l) Mine laying.—For service on such duty from May 26, 1918, to November 11, 1918.
- (m) Mine sweeping.—For service on such duty from April 6, 1917, until mine sweeping is completed.
- (n) Salvage.—For service on such duty from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918.
- (o) Atlantic Fleet.—For service on such duty from May 25, 1918, to November 11, 1918.
- (q) Mobile base.—For service on tenders and repair vessels on such duty east of the thirty-seventh meridian and north of the Equator from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918.
- (r) Submarine chasers.—For service on the high seas on such duty east of the thirty-seventh meridian and north of the Equator between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and on the high seas of the Atlantic Ocean north of the Equator between May 25, 1918, and November 11, 1918.

CHAPTER IV

THE U. S. MARINE CORPS IN THE WAR

The Marine Corps is a distinct organization, commanded by the Major General Commandant, although under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department. The Marines constitute a small, highly efficient military force, whose primary function is in connection with the Navy, especially in landings on foreign soil. During the World War, the Marine Corps also made an important contribution to the American Expeditionary Forces. The Corps increased from a total strength on active duty of 13,725 on April 6, 1917, to 72,963 on November 11, 1918, and maximum of 75,101 on December 11, 1918.

The Act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, authorized in emergency an increase in the strength of the Corps to 693 officers and 17,400 enlisted men. During the war, further temporary increases were authorized, raising the total authorized strength of the regular Marine Corps to 3,341 officers and 75,500 enlisted men. The actual strength on November 11, 1918, was 1,722 commissioned officers, 257 warrant officers and 65,666 enlisted men.

The enlisted strength of the Marine Corps branch of the Naval Militia on April 6, 1917, when mustered into Federal service as National Naval Volunteers, was 24 officers and 928 enlisted men. There was no recruiting for the Marine Corps branch after April 1, 1917. On July 1, 1918, the Marine Corps branch of the National Naval Volunteers was consolidated with the Marine Corps Reserve.

The Act of August 29, 1916, establishing the Naval Reserve Force, included also a similar Marine Corps Reserve. On April 6, 1917, there were enrolled in the Reserve, subject to call to active duty, 3 officers and 36 enlisted men. The strength of the Reserve on active duty November 11, 1918, was 463 commissioned officers, 33 warrant officers and 6,760 enlisted personnel, including 277 female reservists.

By the Act of August 31, 1918, the selective draft was extended to the Navy and Marine Corps. In anticipation thereof, enlistments and enrollments had been stopped on August 9, except in the case of bona-fide applications pending on that date. Under the regulations, the Marine Corps was allotted quotas for induction, beginning October 1. All inductions into the Marine Corps were voluntary and subject to usual Marine Corps standards—total number 7,088. Marine sections of the Students Army Training Corps were established at 10 colleges and universities—total quota 1,290. The Marine Corps requested no inductions after November 18, 1918, and on December 4, 1918, recruiting in the usual way was resumed on a very limited scale, enrollments in the Reserve, however, being discontinued.

A large increase was required in number of officers, both for the permanent service and for the temporary expansion. Officers, permanent and temporary, commissioned in the regular Marine Corps from April to October, 1917, were drawn from the following sources: graduates of the Naval Academy 6; warrant officers 89; noncommissioned officers 122; Reserve officers and National Naval Volunteers 36; graduates of military colleges 284; other civilians with military or naval experience or training 136; civilians selected by competitive examination (held July 10, 1917) 86; miscellaneous 2. The newly appointed officers were ordered to several depots until the completion of buildings at Quantico, Va., in July, 1917, when 345 of them were assembled there for an officers' camp of instruction, completed in October, 1917. After October, 1917, no further appointments of civilians were made and, except for graduates of the Naval Academy, all officers were appointed from the noncommissioned grades as the result of systematic selection and training. The first training camp was held at Quantico, April-July, 1918, resulting in 391 commissions. A similar training camp was conducted for the Marines in France, resulting in 164 commissions. The second training camp at Quantico, August-December, 1918, graduated 432, and the Army candidate school in France 172. These graduates were commissioned in the Reserve and subsequently given temporary appointments in the Marine Corps. From the third training camp at Quantico, there were graduated 235 in July, 1919, who were commissioned in the Reserve and placed at once on inactive duty status. There were also 48 graduates of the Army candidate school in France, who were commissioned in the Reserve and discharged or placed on inactive duty status upon return to the United States, with the exception of 4 who were transferred to the temporary service. There were, also, 69 officers graduated from the Marine Corps school of machine gun instruction at Utica, N. Y. The training of officers for aviation duty is described hereinafter.

The staff departments in the Marine Corps include only Adjutant and Inspector's Department, Paymaster's Department and Quartermaster's Department. The increased requirements for officers were met largely by the temporary advancement of pay clerks and quartermaster clerks to commissioned rank and of experienced noncommissioned officers to warrant rank, and by using Reserve officers. The Chaplain Corps, Medical Corps, Dental Corps and Nurse Corps of the Navy serve also the Marine Corps.

The Marine Corps recruits received a comparatively brief but thorough training. The basic training was conducted mainly at the two regular recruit depots at Parris Island, S. C., and Mare Island, Cal., which were greatly enlarged in size and scope and handled total recruits 46,202 and 11,901, respectively. The period of training at the recruit depots was normally eight weeks, followed by a brief period of advanced training at Quantico, Va., especially for service in France. Training in open warfare was emphasized. In addition to the general training, there were special schools in various branches at the recruit depots and at Quantico. The Marine Corps school for machine gun instruction, at the Savage Arms Company, Utica, N. Y., graduated 69 officers and 2,084 enlisted men. The units composing the 4th Brigade of Marines were trained in France as part of the 2d Division, A. E. F., but the Marine replacements received little or no training in training area in France, being hurried into the fighting.

On April 6, 1917, the Marine section of naval aviation consisted of 4 commissioned officers, 1 warrant officer and 30 enlisted men, total 35. On November 11, 1918, the strength of Marine aviation was 250 commissioned officers, 32 warrant officers and 2,180 enlisted men, total 2,462. Training was conducted at a station for Marine flyers at the Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa., and at Navy and Army aviation establishments. In March, 1918, the Marine flying field at Miami, Fla., was established, and became the main training center for Marine aviation. Officer candidates were given a course in ground work at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, followed by training in actual flying at Miami. Upon qualifying, they were commissioned in the Reserve Flying Corps. Mechanics were trained at the Marine section of the naval school for mechanics at Great Lakes Training Station and at a similar school in aviation mechanics at San Diego, Cal.

	April 6, 1917	Nov. 11, 1918
United States	6,664	37,043
Cuba, Guam, Hawaiian Is., Philippine Is., Porto Rico, Virgin Is.	1,734	4,546
China, Haiti, Nicaragua, Santo Domingo, etc.....	2,999	3,257
Naval vessels on sea duty.....	2,236	2,073
Naval duty ashore in war zone.....	1,446
(Azores—199; England—71; France—1,176)
American Expeditionary Forces.....	24,555
Total	13,633	72,920

The Marine Corps fulfilled in all respects the increased requirements in connection with the naval service. Garrisons were maintained as usual at navy yards and stations in the United States and in the insular possessions and Cuba, and a great many additional detachments were detailed to guard naval magazines, depots, radio stations, and other posts. Altogether, during the war Marines were assigned to 107 different Marine and Navy posts in the United States. For supply of naval requirements, the Marine Corps maintained a base force at Philadelphia, Pa. There was maintained, also, a brigade of pre-war strength standing by to protect the Mexican oil fields. The Marine aviation section assigned to the naval air station at Miami, Fla., performed arduous sea-patrol duty from July, 1918, until the Armistice.

The Marine contingents stationed in China, Nicaragua, Haiti and Santo Domingo, for maintenance of order and protection of property, were retained throughout the war period. Active operations were conducted in Haiti and Santo Domingo against bandit rebels by the Marines and by the native gendarmerie, administered and officered by Marine and Navy personnel.

Marine detachments served on the American battleships in the war zone and on many of the cruisers of the Cruiser and Transport Force, as well as on naval vessels in other parts of the world. On November 11, 1918, Marines were serving on 33 naval vessels.

For duty with the naval service ashore in the war zone, Marine detachments were sent to naval headquarters, Paris, France, and to the naval bases in the Azores and at Cardiff, Wales. The principal Marine operations in the war zone, aside from the American Expeditionary Forces, were in aviation. The 1st Marine Aeronautic Company was sent to the Azores in January, 1918, and performed important duty in anti-submarine patrol. The 1st Marine Aviation Force, consisting of Headquarters Company and Squadrons A, B, and C, was sent to France in July, 1918, joined in October by Squadron D. This force of land planes operated under the Navy as the Day Wing of the Northern Bombing Group. The Day Wing carried out 14 independent raids behind the enemy lines. Many Marine Corps flyers served with British and French squadrons. On November 11, 1918, the Marine aviation forces in France comprised 165 officers and 895 enlisted men, operating 177 land planes, and in the Azores 12 officers and 135 enlisted men, operating 18 seaplanes and flying boats.

The outstanding service of the Marine Corps during the war was in the American Expeditionary Forces. The 5th Regiment of Marines formed part of the first expedition to France, sailing in June, 1917. The 6th Regiment followed in several instalments from September, 1917, to January, 1918, and the 6th Machine Gun Battalion in December, 1917. These three units constituted the 4th Brigade of Marines, forming one of the two infantry brigades of the 2d Division, A. E. F. The Marines were widely used for military and provost guards and other service of the rear duties, and it was not until February, 1918, that the 4th Brigade was entirely assembled.

The 2d Division, including the 4th Brigade of Marines, entered the front line in the Lorraine region in the middle of March, 1918, remaining there until the middle of May. The division was in reserve when the Germans launched their third great offensive, reaching the Marne and advancing towards Paris. The 2d Division was thrown into the line on June 1 across the Chateau-Thierry—Paris road and stopped the German advance. The major defensive operation ending June 5, the 2d Division at once took the initiative and carried on vigorous attacks during the month of June with signal success against strong resistance. A notable feature was the clearing of the Bois de Belleau, which was thereupon renamed by the French "Bois de la Brigade de Marine". This offensive action from June 6 to July 1, although not designated as a major operation, was marked by extremely severe fighting.

The 2d Division again distinguished itself in the Aisne-Marne Offensive, launched July 18 against the western face of the Marne salient. The 1st and 2d Divisions and a French Moroccan Division, concentrated by forced marches, were employed as the spear-head of the attack, striking directly eastward to the heights south of Soissons. At a single bound, they broke through the enemy's defenses, thus threatening the communications leading into the salient and forcing a general withdrawal from the Marne. The 2d Division, having advanced over 6 miles in two days, was relieved on the night of July 19.

The 2d Division was commanded from the end of July, 1918, to August, 1919, by Major General John A. Lejeune of the Marine Corps. The division participated in the St. Mihiel Offensive as a unit of the First Corps of the American Army. At the opening of the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, the 2d Division was placed at the disposal of the French Fourth Army, operating in Champagne to the west of the Argonne Forest in cooperation with the American Army to the east. The 2d Division entered the line on October 1-2, 1918, and attacking on October 3, captured Blanc Mont ridge, the keystone of the German defensive system on this front, advancing in one day about 6 kilometers. The division was relieved on October 10.

In the final phase of the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, beginning November 1, 1918, the 2d Division, as part of the Fifth Corps of the American Army, was assigned the task of overcoming the critical part of the enemy's defense, by driving a wedge through Landres-et-St. Georges. The division accomplished the desired results, advancing 9 kilometers on the first day and breaking the enemy's defense. The Army pressed forward along the entire front, driving the enemy with increasing swiftness although against stubborn resistance until the Armistice on November 11. The 2d Division forced a crossing of the Meuse River on the night of November 10. On November 17, the 2d Division commenced the march to the Rhine as part of the American Army of Occupation.

The 5th and 6th Regiments of Marines and the 6th Machine Gun Battalion were awarded the French fourragere in the colors of the Croix de Guerre, based on two citations in French Orders of the Army. The 5th and 6th Regiments were cited on three occasions—for achievements in the Chateau-Thierry sector, in the Aisne-Marne Offensive, and in the Meuse-Argonne (Champagne), and the 6th Machine Gun Battalion on the first two occasions.

The 4th Brigade, having a normal strength of 8,469, suffered 12,000 casualties. In order to maintain this brigade, a number of replacement battalions were sent to France at successive dates. The Marine Corps also furnished a considerable number of officers to command Army units of the 2d Division and of other divisions and for staff and detached duty throughout the A. E. F. At the Armistice, a regiment of Marines was in readiness for overseas service, trained in the use of the 7-inch naval guns installed on tractor mounts. The 5th Brigade of Marines, including the 11th and 13th Regiments and the 5th Machine Gun Battalion, arrived in France September-November, 1918. The units of the 5th Brigade were never together as a brigade in France nor at any time part of a combat division, but were scattered at posts throughout the Services of Supply, performing various duties. The 4th and 5th Brigades returned to the United States in August, 1919, leaving only a few Marines in Europe, who were all returned by the end of the year.

Demobilization was begun to a limited extent in the United States soon after the Armistice. In July, 1919, instructions were issued to complete the demobilization as rapidly as the exigencies of the service permitted. The privilege of discharge was extended to all wartime enlistments, regarding February 3, 1917, as the initial date. The Reserve personnel in general were simply released from active duty, not discharged. By the end of the calendar year 1919, practically all emergency personnel had been discharged or released. Marine Corps recruiting was resumed as usual on December 4, 1918. In May-June, 1919, recruits were accepted for "special temporary limited service in France", enlistment being for the regular term of four years, but with assurance of discharge in the fall upon return from France. The Act of July 11, 1919, authorized transfers from the Reserve to the regular Marine Corps and extensions of enlistment where enlisted for the duration of the war. On September 18, 1919, enlistments were authorized for two, three or four year periods. By September 30, 1919, the active strength of the Marine Corps was reduced to 20,574 regulars and 486 reserves, and by the end of the calendar year this was further reduced to about 16,000. The post-war authorized strength was 27,400, nearly double the pre-war strength, making it necessary to retain a large number of temporary officers beyond the period of active demobilization.

Casualties of the Marine Corps forces in Europe as follows:

Deaths	2,807
Killed in action.....	1,450
Died of wounds.....	1,006
Died of disease.....	304
Died of other causes.....	47
Wounds not mortal (7,714 individuals).....	9,915
Prisoners of war.....	65

Marine Corps casualties elsewhere for the period from April 6, 1917, to September 10, 1919, as follows:

Deaths	787
Killed in action.....	8
Died of wounds.....	3
Died of disease.....	628
Died of other causes.....	148
Wounds not mortal.....	24

CHAPTER V

A GENERAL STATEMENT OF MARYLAND'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE U. S. MILITARY AND NAVAL FORCES

U. S. ARMY

Marylanders responded patriotically to the various calls for military service—for the Regular Army, the National Guard, the Reserves, and the National Army. This State was well to the fore from the very start, beginning with the early recruiting campaigns during the spring and summer of 1917, and the calls for the officer training camps.

The National Guard of Maryland was mustered into Federal service for the World War by successive calls—the 4th Regiment on March 25, 1917, the 5th Regiment on April 13, 1917, a few individuals at special dates, and the remaining organizations and personnel, including reservists, on July 25, 1917, with the exception only of a few staff officers, most of whom were called subsequently. The organizations called July 25, 1917, included Headquarters 1st Brigade, 1st Regiment, 1st Separate Company, Troop A, Field Hospital No. 1, Ambulance Company No. 1, Batteries A, B, and C of Field Artillery, and Battalion Headquarters, 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th Companies of Coast Artillery. By an active recruiting campaign, practically all units of the Maryland National Guard were recruited to full strength. The total strength of the Maryland National Guard on August 5, 1917, when drafted into the U. S. Army, thus losing its State status, was 6,829, comprising 242 officers and 6,587 enlisted men.

Under the selective service draft, there were inducted and accepted from Maryland a total of 34,556 men. The statistics of inductions, by counties, are as follows:

	Total Calls	Inducted	Accepted	Rejected	Cancelled

Worcester	540	552	529	22	1
Total	35,428	36,334	34,556	1,681	97

These statistics do not include deserters from the draft—that is, men who were inducted but failed to report and had not been delivered to military control prior to the closing of the draft records. The number for the State of Maryland was 2,418, the percentage for the State being approximately the same as the national average.

The Maryland National Guard units, with the exception of the Coast Artillery companies and the 1st Separate Company (colored), proceeded to Camp McClellan, Ala., in August-September, 1917, and became part of the 29th Division, U. S. Army. The first inducted men from Maryland were sent to camp on September 26, 1917, and inductions continued until the date of the Armistice. Substantially all inducted men from Maryland were sent first to Camp Meade, although large numbers were subsequently transferred to other camps and stations. Marylanders constituted a large part of the 79th Division, organized at Camp Meade in the fall of 1917. The 29th and 79th Divisions are covered, respectively, by Chapters VII and VIII herein. In addition to certain component units of the 29th and 79th Divisions, a number of other organization units of the U. S. Army were composed largely of Marylanders, as covered by Chapter IX herein. Marylanders in smaller numbers were scattered throughout the U. S. Army, in all types of organizations and lines of service. After the war, the colors of the demobilized organization units were presented by the War Department to the States having the largest representation in the respective units.

Maryland's contribution of medical officers was especially notable. The chief consultants in medicine and in surgery and many other medical officers in high position in the A. E. F. were Marylanders, as well as many medical officers who rendered service of great value in this country in the organization and administration of the Army medical establishment.

The statistics of Marylanders in World War service in the U. S. Army, based upon the records furnished by the War Department to the State of Maryland, are as follows: officers 3,420 (28 colored); enlisted men 48,059 (10,992 colored); nurses 435; total 51,914.

The statistics of casualties are as follows:

	Officers	Enlisted	Nurses	Total
Deaths (under honorable conditions):
Battle deaths.....	38	607 (27 colored)		645
Other deaths.....	53	821 (182 colored)	10	884

Wounds not mortal.....	122 (1 colored)	2,339 (93 colored)		2,461
Prisoners of war.....	2	28 (1 colored)		30

U. S. NAVY

Maryland, as a tidewater State, has always been strong for the Navy. It is not surprising, therefore, to find that in the World War this State furnished far more than its proportion of men to the Navy. In the first call for increase of the Navy, issued March 26, 1917, Maryland completed its quota of 800 by the appointed date, April 20, being almost unmatched in this respect. This was accomplished through a rousing campaign, in which a large committee of representative citizens cooperated with the Navy recruiting service. Maryland held its place in the forefront also in subsequent recruiting, both for the Regular Navy and the Naval Reserve Force.

The Maryland Naval Militia, numbering 25 officers and 251 men, under Commander Charles F. Macklin, were mobilized for Federal service on April 6, 1917, being enrolled as National Naval Volunteers. This original contingent, known as the first battalion, was sent to Philadelphia on April 9 and assigned at once to the U. S. S. Missouri, although many were shortly transferred to other ships or stations. The Naval Militia did not serve as a unit, but were assigned as individuals. Meanwhile, Commander Macklin remained in charge of further recruiting and training of National Naval Volunteers. Recruiting headquarters were at the Richmond Market Armory in Baltimore. On May 4, 1917, a camp was opened at the State Rifle Range, Saunders Range, where the recruits were given their preliminary training and contingents transferred from time to time to ships or stations. This camp, under Commander Macklin, handled in addition nearly 1,000 Naval Reserves sent for the most part from Norfolk. On October 31, 1917, the camp was closed and the remaining personnel transferred to Norfolk. The total number from Maryland entering the naval service through the Naval Militia or National Naval Volunteers was about 775.

On July 2, 1917, the State Conservation Commission's "Oyster Navy", comprising 19 small craft and about 100 men, was taken over by the U. S. Navy. These vessels, designated as Squadron 8, Fifth Naval District, performed patrol duty in Maryland waters. They were returned to State control on December 1, 1918. A considerable number of privately-owned small craft, also, were taken over by the Navy, serving on patrol duty in the Chesapeake Bay or attached to naval headquarters at Norfolk or Baltimore.

The bulk of the Marylanders entering the naval service during the war were sent to the Naval Training Station, Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Va. After shore training here, the majority were assigned for a period of sea training, chiefly on the battleships of the Atlantic Fleet. For permanent duty, a very considerable percentage of the Maryland men were absorbed by the extensive activities in the Fifth Naval District, including the great Naval Operating Base, Hampton Roads, Va. Baltimore was designated as headquarters of Section One, Fifth Naval District. Naval activities centering in Baltimore grew to large volume, including recruiting, naval intelligence, inspection of ships entering the port, licensing of small craft, patrol of Maryland waters, placing armed guards on merchant vessels, taking over and operating ships in the overseas cargo service, cost inspection on naval contracts in shipyards and munitions plants.

In the Navy, there were no units made up especially of men from particular States. The story of Marylanders in the Navy is found in the individual records of the men in all lines of the naval service—namely, on shore duty in the United States, in patrolling the coasts of the United States, in naval aviation, on the battle-ships and cruisers of the Atlantic Fleet, on the destroyers and submarine patrols in the war zone, in mine-laying operations in the North Sea, as armed guards on merchants vessels, on troop and cargo transports, and with the big Navy guns in France.

The statistics of Marylanders in World War service in the U. S. Navy, based upon the records furnished by the Navy Department to the State of Maryland, are as follows: commissioned officers 828; warrant officers 131; enlisted personnel 8,454 (564 colored); total 9,413. These statistics include U. S. Coast Guard as follows: commissioned officers 38; warrant officers 30; enlisted 341 (46 colored); total 409. The enlisted personnel includes 454 female—27 nurses and 427 in the yeoman branch for clerical work. The statistics of deaths in the service under honorable conditions are as follows:

	Officers		Enlisted	Total
	Commissioned	Warrant
Enemy action	2	1	21 (1 colored)	24
Other causes	17	2	126 (13 colored)	145
Total	19	3	147 (14 colored)	169

U. S. MARINE CORPS

In the Marine Corps, there were no units made up especially of men from particular States. The Marylanders in the Marine Corps were distributed throughout in the various lines of service—in the A. E. F., in aviation, in detachments on naval vessels, at shore stations, and in maintenance of peace and order in Haiti, Santo Domingo and other parts of the world.

The statistics of Marylanders in World War service in the U. S. Marine Corps, based upon the records furnished by the Marine Corps to the State of Maryland, are as follows: commissioned officers 115; warrant officers 8; enlisted personnel 1,118; total 1,241. The statistics of casualties are as follows:

	Officers ¹	Enlisted	Total
Deaths (under honorable conditions):
Battle deaths	3	30	33
Other deaths	3	18	21

CHAPTER VI

THE MARYLAND NATIONAL GUARD

On June 18, 1916, when the call was issued for Mexican border service, the National Guard of Maryland, not including the Naval Militia, comprised the following:

	Officers	Enlisted	Total
Staff Departments	11	11
Hqtrs. 1st Brigade.....	2	2
1st Infantry	52	759	811
4th Infantry	50	575	625
5th Infantry	48	623	671
1st Separate Co., Inf. (colored).....	3	65	68
Troop A	3	62	65
Field Hospital No. 1.....	4	33	37
Ambulance Co. No. 1.....	3	30	33
Battery A, Field Artillery.....	5	124	129
1st Company, Coast Artillery.....	3	65	68
Total	184	2,336	2,520

All organizations were mustered into Federal service with the exception of the 1st Company, Coast Artillery, and the 1st Separate Company, Infantry. A mobilization camp was established at Laurel and practically all units were in camp by June 25. The 1st Infantry left for the border on June 30, followed by the other organizations on July 5, with the exception of Battery A, Field Artillery, which left on July 6 for a camp of instruction at Tobyhanna, Pa. By recruiting, the total actual strength mustered into Federal service as of July 5 was increased to 3,382. A recruiting service was conducted throughout the State for about two months for the purpose of securing the additional men required to complete the enlisted strength of the organizations in Federal service, but without large results.

Battery A returned from Tobyhanna and was mustered out of Federal service on September 26. The 4th Infantry returned from the border and was mustered out on September 26, the 1st Infantry on November 4, Troop A on December 23, Field Hospital No. 1 and Ambulance Company No. 1 on January 6, and the 5th Infantry on February 24. The total strength of the Maryland National Guard, not including the Naval Militia, on January 1, 1917, was 3,212.

The 4th Infantry was recalled into Federal service on March 25, 1917, and the 5th Infantry on April 13. A group of 9 officers and 24 enlisted men of the Medical Department were called into Federal service in June, ahead of their respective organizations, to attend a medical training camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and a few other officers and enlisted men, principally of the Quartermaster Corps, were called at special dates. The remaining organizations and personnel of the Maryland National Guard, including reservists, were mustered into Federal service on July 25, with the exception only of a few officers of the staff departments, most of whom were called at subsequent dates. Three additional companies of Coast Artillery had been organized in April, 1917, thus completing a battalion of four companies, and Batteries B and C, Field Artillery, on July 23 and July 24, respectively. On August 5, 1917, the entire National Guard in Federal service was drafted into the Army of the United States, thus losing its State status. The actual strength of the Maryland National Guard on that date was as follows:

	Officers	Enlisted	Total
Staff Departments	31	4	35
Hqtrs. 1st Brigade.....	3	14	17
1st Infantry	56	1,698	1,754
4th Infantry	53	1,411	1,464
5th Infantry	53	2,072	2,125
1st Separate Co., Inf.....	3	150	153
Troop A	3	102	105
Field Hospital No. 1.....	5	82	87
Ambulance Co. No. 1.....	4	147	151
Battery A, Field Artillery.....	5	149	154
Battery B, Field Artillery.....	5	157	162
Battery C, Field Artillery.....	5	166	171
Bn. Hqtrs., Coast Artillery.....	4	1	5
1st Co., Coast Artillery.....	3	107	110
2d Co., Coast Artillery.....	3	109	112

4th Co., Coast Artillery.....	3	109	112
Total	242	6,587	6,829

The 4th Infantry, under command of Colonel Harry C. Jones, was mustered into Federal service on March 25, 1917, at its armory in Baltimore. The several companies were used to guard vital railroad points from Havre de Grace to Harper's Ferry, as well as the railroad tunnels and munitions plants in and around Baltimore. Regimental headquarters and headquarters of the first battalion were stationed at Baltimore, headquarters of the second battalion at Havre de Grace and headquarters of the third battalion at Harper's Ferry. Colonel Jones, as senior officer in Federal service, commanded the provisional brigade made up of the 4th and 5th Regiments of Infantry, Maryland National Guard, engaged in guarding important utilities in the Maryland District, Eastern Department, extending from Cumberland, Md., to Cape Charles, Va. On August 18, the 4th Infantry was reassembled in mobilization camp at Laurel, Md., and on September 16 entrained for Camp McClellan, Anniston, Ala.

The 5th Infantry, under command of Colonel Washington Bowie, Jr., was mustered into Federal service on April 13, 1917, at its armory in Baltimore. The second battalion was already on active duty since April 5 under State orders in guarding the Baltimore City waterworks. In Federal service, the second battalion was sent out in May on duty guarding railroad property in western Maryland and Pennsylvania and one company at Cape Charles, Va., with battalion headquarters at Cumberland, Md. The first and second battalions were stationed for a time in Baltimore, having detachments on guard duty. In June, the first battalion was sent to points in Virginia, with battalion headquarters at Richmond, and a few weeks later the several companies of the third battalion were sent on guard duty at camps in Maryland and Virginia and one company at Yaphank, Long Island. Regimental headquarters and headquarters of the third battalion remained in Baltimore. On August 15, the regiment was reassembled in mobilization camp at Cockeysville and on September 16 entrained for Camp McClellan.

Under State orders, a provisional battalion of the 1st Infantry, comprising Companies D and E and attached sanitary personnel, under command of Major Milton A. Reckord, reported on March 22, 1917, at Havre de Grace for duty in guarding the railroad bridges over the Susquehanna River. Company H joined this battalion on March 26. The battalion was relieved from active duty on April 3. On April 25, 1917, under State orders, a provisional battalion comprising Companies D and H and attached sanitary personnel, under command of Major D. John Markey, reported for duty at Lake Montebello and Loch Raven in guarding the Baltimore City water supply.

The 1st Infantry, under command of Colonel Charles A. Little, was mustered into Federal service on July 25, 1917. The armories or home stations of the various companies of this regiment were as follows: Headquarters Company, Hagerstown; Supply Company, Annapolis; Machine Gun Company, Annapolis; Sanitary Detachment, Baltimore; Company A, Frederick; Company B, Hagerstown; Company C, Cambridge; Company D, Belair; Company E, Elkton; Company F, Hyattsville; Company G, Cumberland; Company H, Westminster; Company I, Salisbury; Company K, Silver Spring; Company L, Crisfield; Company M, Annapolis. The companies remained at their home stations, with the exception of the provisional battalion on duty at Lake Montebello. On September 10, the various units entrained for Camp McClellan.

The 1st Separate Company, Infantry, was mustered into Federal service on July 25, 1917, at the Richmond Market Armory in Baltimore. On August 3, a detachment numbering 67 was sent to Pittsburgh for guard duty, followed on September 29 by the rest of the company, remaining at Pittsburgh until October 30, when transferred to Camp McClellan. By the original organization table, the 1st Separate Company was assigned as part of the Horsed Section, 104th Ammunition Train, 29th Division, but this plan was not carried into effect. The company was transferred to Camp Stuart, Newport News, Va., on January 1, 1918, and incorporated into the 372d Infantry as Company I.

Troop A was mustered into Federal service on July 25, 1917, at its armory in Pikesville. This unit entrained for Camp McClellan on August 17.

Field Hospital No. 1 and Ambulance Company No. 1 were mustered into Federal service on July 25, 1917, at the Richmond Market Armory in Baltimore. Field Hospital No. 1 dated from 1909, but Ambulance Company No. 1 only from September, 1915. The ambulance company entrained for Camp McClellan on August 17, 1917, and the field hospital on September 16.

Battery A, Field Artillery, was organized in December, 1915, the leading spirits being a number of men who had attended the military training camp at Plattsburg. In May, 1917, a battalion of Field Artillery was authorized in the Maryland

National Guard. As the result of strenuous recruiting efforts on Battery A's part, Battery B was formally organized on July 23 and Battery C on July 24. The officers and non-coms for the new batteries were drawn largely from Battery A. The three batteries were mustered into Federal service on July 25, 1917, at the armory in Pikesville. On September 16, they entrained for Camp McClellan.

The 1st Company, Coast Artillery, was organized April 17, 1916. Early in 1917, efforts were turned towards forming additional companies for an entire battalion. The 2d Company was formally organized on April 16, the 3d Company on April 17, and the 4th Company on April 19. The battalion organization was completed in May. The battalion of Coast Artillery was mustered into Federal service on July 25, 1917, at the Richmond Market Armory in Baltimore. Early in August, orders were received to organize the 117th Trench Mortar Battery. This unit, formed from the 3d Company and the larger part of the 4th Company, left Baltimore on August 24 for Camp Mills, Long Island. In the meantime, the 1st and 2d Companies proceeded to Fort Howard on August 7. The battalion headquarters and the 4th Company remained in Baltimore until completion of the organization of the 117th Trench Mortar Battery, and then likewise proceeded to Fort Howard on September 6. On November 4, the 1st and 2d Companies were assigned to duty guarding the piers at Canton and at Locust Point. Battery F, 58th Artillery, C. A. C., was organized at Fort Howard on December 10, 1917, absorbing the 4th Company, which had been restored to full strength, and drawing on the 1st and 2d Companies for 75 men each. The men of the 1st and 2d Companies, however, did not join Battery F at Fort Howard until March, 1918. There remained only a handful in the 1st and 2d Companies, which on January 20 had been redesignated, respectively, as the 5th and 6th Companies, Coast Defenses of Baltimore. These companies were finally relieved from guard duty in May and June, respectively, and returned to Fort Howard. They were subsequently filled up repeatedly with recruits sent to Fort Howard for training and drawn upon from time to time in the organization of units for overseas service.

The brigade commander of the Maryland National Guard, Brig. Gen. Charles D. Gaither, with his staff left for Camp McClellan on August 17, 1917. As already seen, Troop A and Ambulance Company No. 1 entrained on the same date. One company from each of the three Maryland regiments was ordered to Camp McClellan at the same time to assist in getting the camp into condition. The three regiments of Infantry, the battalion of Field Artillery and Field Hospital No. 1 followed on September 16.

The War Department table, which however is not entirely accurate, shows the disposition of the Maryland National Guard units as follows:

CHAPTER VII

THE 29TH DIVISION, U. S. ARMY

The 29th ("Blue and Gray") Division was called into existence by order of Headquarters, Eastern Department, dated July 26, 1917, assigning practically the entire National Guard of Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, New Jersey, and several units of the District of Columbia. Brigadier General Charles W. Barber, of the New Jersey National Guard, as senior brigade commander, became temporary commander of the division. The divisional organization was actually started on August 25, 1917, on which date Major General Charles G. Morton assumed command. The various elements of the division were concentrated at Camp McClellan, Ala., during the latter part of August and the first part of September. Under order dated September 15, 1917, the division was reorganized in accordance with the new tables of organization.

The War Department table, which however is not entirely accurate, shows the disposition of the old National Guard units in the formation of the new divisional units as follows:

Headquarters Troop.....	Det. from N.J. Cav.
57th Infantry Brigade:
113th Infantry Regiment.....	4th N.J. Inf., less Hq Co., M.G. Co., Co. L, and part of Sup. Co.; 1st N.J. Inf., less Co. K; 2d N.J. Inf., less band, M.G. Co., and Cos. G and L.
114th Infantry Regiment.....	3d N.J. Inf., less band, M.G. Co., and Cos. I and L; 5th N.J. Inf., less Co. F.

104th Train Headquarters and Military Police	Tps. A and C, 1st Sq. N.J. Cav.; and Tp. A, Md. Cav.
104th Ammunition Train.....	1st Sq. Va. Cav. and individual transfers.
104th Sanitary Train.....	1st Md. Amb. Co. and 1st Va. Amb. Co.; 1st N.J. F.H.; 1st Md. F.H.; and 1st Va. F.H.
104th Supply Train	Individual transfers.
104th Engineer Train	Individual transfers.

The 1st Delaware Infantry was originally assigned to the 114th Infantry, but was subsequently withdrawn and sent to another camp.

During the period of training at Camp McClellan, contingents of men were transferred from time to time to other camps to complete organizations destined for early embarkation. As replacements, there were received in November, 1917, about 1,000 men from Maryland, New Jersey and the District of Columbia, and in May, 1918, in order to fill up the division prior to departure for France, about 5,000 drafted men from New York, New England and the Middle West.

Division headquarters and the two infantry brigades sailed for France on June 15, 1918. The remaining units followed shortly, the artillery brigade and division trains landing in England and crossing thence to France. All elements of the division were in France by the end of July. The trains joined the division in the Alsace sector, with the exception of the larger part of the ammunition train, which remained with the artillery brigade. The artillery brigade did not join the division in France until December, 1918.

The division proceeded on June 30 to the 10th Training Area and established headquarters at Prauthoy (Haute Marne). On July 17, the division moved to the Belfort area in upper Alsace for the purpose of taking over a quiet sector of the front. The movement into the defensive sector began on July 25, the units of the 29th Division being first placed for a time in line alongside of the French units—57th Brigade affiliated with French 151st Division in the Boron sector and 58th Brigade with French 53d Division in the Rougemont sector. On August 9, the 29th Division took over entirely the newly-established Center Sector, Haute Alsace, extending from 1 kilometer west of Carspach through Eglingen to Spechbach Creek 3 kilometers northwest of Ammerzwiller, a frontage of about 12 kilometers. Division headquarters were located at Boron from July 25 to August 9, and at Montreux from August 9 to September 22. While in this area, the division was under the tactical command of the French Fortieth Corps, although under the administrative control of the American Fifth Corps from July 18 to August 19 and of the Seventh Corps from August 19 to September 22. The French furnished all artillery on this front. The sector proved not so "quiet" as expected, since there were occasional raids on both sides and persistent artillery fire. The division was relieved by the French 38th Division on September 22. During this period in defensive sector, the casualties of the division were killed in action 533, died of wounds 39, and wounds not mortal 693, mostly gassed.

From the Alsace front, the division moved to Conde-en-Barrois (Meuse) in the American First Army area, in reserve. On October 2, the division was transferred to the French Seventeenth Corps, under the American First Army, and proceeded to the vicinity of Verdun. Division headquarters were located at Vacherauville from October 7 to 29.

The progress of the Meuse-Argonne drive west of the Meuse now made it imperative to extend the operations to the east bank, in order to dislodge the enemy from the heights commanding the terrain west of the river. The attack east of the Meuse was executed by the French Seventeenth Corps. The corps had in line east of the Meuse the French 18th Division and the French 26th Division, from left to right. In the initial attack, the 58th Brigade, American 29th Division, was attached to the French 18th Division, and the rest of the 29th Division was held in corps reserve. The American 33d Division on the west bank of the Meuse was attached to the French Seventeenth Corps, under orders to cross the river early in the advance.

The attack east of the Meuse was launched by the French Seventeenth Corps on October 8. There was no preliminary artillery bombardment, but an effective rolling barrage covering the troops in their advance. The initial attack evidently took the enemy somewhat by surprise and swept forward at a rapid pace, but soon encountered strong resistance. This vital sector of the battle-front was held by the enemy with grim determination. The naturally strong positions had been fortified by a highly-organized defensive system, so that the enemy defenses were regarded as well-nigh impregnable. The fighting throughout in this sector was extremely severe. The whole area of operations was subject to intense enemy artillery fire from the hills to the north and northeast, and the attacking troops faced a persistent and devastating fire from innumerable machine gun nests.

The general plan of attack prescribed four successive stages, as follows:

- (1) Intermediate objective: general line, Bois d'Haumont—Consenvoye.
- (2) Normal objective: Ravin de la Reine, generally along Point 352—Consenvoye road.
- (3) First exploitation objective: general line, Crepion—northern edge Bois de Chaume.
- (4) Second exploitation objective: Beaumont—Flabas—Crepion—Bois d'Etraye—Bois de la Grande Montagne—Sivry-sur-Meuse.

The units of the 58th Brigade moved during the night of October 7-8 into position on the east bank of the Meuse, outposts of the French 18th Division, however, remaining in place until commencement of the attack. The 58th Brigade attacked to the north on a front of 2 kilometers between the Ravin d'Haumont and the Meuse from the general line, Samogneux—Brabant. The formation for the attack was as follows: 115th Infantry on the left, with first battalion in assault, second battalion in support and third battalion in reserve; 116th Infantry on the right, with third battalion in assault, first battalion in support and second battalion in reserve. Battalion formation was normally with two companies in advance and two in support. With each battalion was a machine gun company.

The infantry moved to the attack at the prescribed hour, 5 a. m., on October 8. On the 58th Brigade right, the third battalion, 116th Infantry, met little resistance in its advance to the intermediate objective, which practically coincided with the main line of resistance of the enemy's first defensive position, along the northern slope of Malbrouck Hill and the southern edge of Bois de Brabant. Here the enemy resistance stiffened. Severe machine gun fire was encountered from Bois de Brabant in front, from the right flank where the French had failed to keep up, and from the northern slopes of Malbrouck Hill on the left flank. This rendered impossible the passage of lines by the first battalion as scheduled on the intermediate objective at 9:30 a. m. The front and flanks were sufficiently cleared of the enemy and the passage of lines effected by 2 p. m.

The first battalion, 116th Infantry, carried forward the attack, accompanied by elements of the third battalion, and by 3:40 p. m. reached the normal objective, along Ravin de Molleville and the ridge in Bossois Bois. The right flank being widely exposed, however, a withdrawal was made to the ridge in Bois de Brabant overlooking Ravin de Bourvaux, on a line running northwesterly between Ravin d'Haumont and the Molleville Ferme—Brabant road. The right of the line was extended over half a kilometer to the southward along Ravin d'Haumont for contact with the French. The French 18th Division to the right, at the hinge of the attack, had encountered stronger opposition and made slower progress.

On the 58th Brigade left, the first battalion, 115th Infantry, reached the intermediate objective about 8 a. m., along the trench line extending east from Consenvoye. Company D from support had moved to the left and with two platoons of Company K patrolled the widening area between the regimental zone and the Meuse, pending the advance of the 33d Division.

The second battalion, 115th Infantry, passed through the first battalion about 9:30 a. m. and continued the advance. Considerable machine gun fire was encountered from Malbrouck Hill on the right and from Bois de Consenvoye in front. The Malbrouck ridge, running practically north and south, marked the dividing line between the two regiments. About noon, the southern edge of Bois de Consenvoye was reached. In the meantime, Company F from support was employed as combat patrol on the right flank, entering the zone of the 116th Infantry and taking prisoners and machine guns in the western edge of Bois de Brabant and on Cote 338. The second battalion pressed on through Bois de Consenvoye to the normal objective, reaching about 3:30 p. m. a line 400 meters south of Richene Hill, between the Richene—Consenvoye road and the Molleville Ferme—Brabant road. Having no contact with the 116th Infantry, however, this battalion about 5:30 p. m. withdrew its right flank and organized a line extending southeasterly through Bois de Consenvoye. There was still a gap of half a kilometer between the two regiments.

The mission of the third battalion, 115th Infantry, was to exploit the success after the second battalion attained the normal objective. The second battalion in its advance had swung somewhat to the right. The third battalion, receiving no information from the second, advanced at 12:30 p. m. and, bearing to the left, pressed its way through Bois de Consenvoye, reaching the northwestern edge of the woods along the south fork of the Richene—Consenvoye road. On the right, contact was secured with the second battalion. The 33d Division to the left had crossed the Meuse about 8:30 a. m. and by 12:30 p. m. had reached the road running east from Consenvoye, thence continuing its advance in the zone to the west of Bois de Consenvoye. The right of the 33d Division was well advanced, but leaving a considerable gap in the front line next to the divisional boundary.

The maximum advance of the 58th Brigade on the first day was about 4 kilometers. Many prisoners and machine guns were captured. Under the original plan, the 29th Division was to be given command of the 58th Brigade zone when the normal objective was reached, but this was not carried out and the French 18th Division retained command.

Orders of the French 18th Division for October 9 prescribed the mission of taking all parts of the normal objective. The 58th Brigade was ordered to attack at 6 a. m., with artillery support. About 5 a. m., the enemy counterattacked on the front of the 116th Infantry and on the right of the 115th Infantry, but was repulsed.

The 116th Infantry attacked with first battalion in assault and during the morning advanced about 1 kilometer into Molleville Bois and Bossois Bois. The French to the right failed to keep up and at the close of day were still over a kilometer behind. The gap was covered by patrols.

The 115th Infantry made no advance on October 9. Regimental post command, which was established at Cote des Roches early in the afternoon of October 8, was moved on October 9 to Malbrouck Hill. At night of October 9, there was still a gap between the two regiments of the 58th Brigade. The 33d Division to the left advanced during the morning of October 9 through Bois de Chaume and Bois Plat Chene, but finding its right flank seriously exposed, withdrew to its previous positions. Contact was established with the 115th Infantry.

The original plan was for the 57th Brigade at this stage to relieve the 58th Brigade and to continue the attack. On October 10, however, the 113th Infantry was sent into line on the right of the 58th Brigade, under orders to attack at 11 a. m. The third battalion, to the east of Fond de Walonsevaux, attacked to the northeast, having as its objective Bois de la Reine and Bois des Chenes. By 5:40 p. m., the battalion had gained the northern and eastern edges of these woods. The French 66th Infantry to the right attacked toward Ormont Ferme and Bois d'Ormont, but was unable to advance beyond the southwestern edge of the woods. During the night, Companies A and C, 113th Infantry, were used to form a defensive line along the southern edge of Bois de la Reine and Bois des Chenes, facing Bois d'Ormont.

The second battalion, 113th Infantry, at 11:20 a. m. on October 10, relieved the 116th Infantry on that part of the line east of vertical grid line 26.¹ The line was not advanced during the day, although the right flank was extended slightly for contact with the third battalion at Fond de Walonsevaux.

The second battalion, 115th Infantry, attacked about 7:50 a. m. At 11:15 a. m., the first battalion passed through the second battalion and continued the attack. The third battalion to the left was held up by intense hostile fire from the edge of Bois Plat Chene and requested the assistance of the supporting artillery. After a brief but effective artillery fire, the advance was resumed, taking Richene Hill and penetrating a short distance into Bois Plat Chene. The day's advance by the 115th Infantry was about 1 kilometer, the line reaching the southwest corner of Bois de la Grande Montagne on the right and thence extending 1 kilometer slightly south of west. Contact was maintained with the 33d Division. The right of the 115th Infantry was over half a kilometer in advance of the left of the 116th Infantry. The 115th accordingly extended its line to the south and southeast along the western edge of the Molleville Ferme clearing, joining up with the 116th on the Malbrouck—Les Rapps road at the northern edge of Bossois Bois.

The command of the 58th Brigade, in the zone between vertical grid lines 24 and 26, passed to the 29th Division at 5 a. m. on October 11, the 57th Brigade however remaining attached to the French 18th Division. The 113th Infantry was ordered to continue its attack, having as objectives Ravin de la Reine and Ravin de Molleville. On the right, the third battalion, 113th Infantry, being on the assigned objective, did not advance during the day. A small counterattack was repulsed. The second battalion moved forward with little opposition to Ravin de Molleville, maintaining contact with the 116th Infantry. The French to the right of the 113th Infantry did not advance during the day, and the same gap existed as on the previous night.

Under orders of the 29th Division, the 58th Brigade attacked at 6 a. m. on October 11, preceded by an intense artillery concentration on the southern edge of Bois de la Grande Montagne. The 116th Infantry assigned first battalion to assault, with second in support and third in reserve. The first battalion advanced to the southern edge of the Molleville Ferme clearing, but was held up there by severe hostile fire from the woods to the north and east. Two other attempts were made during the day to cross the clearing, but were repulsed. The line was organized for the night in the northern edge of Bossois Bois.

No change in lines was made on this day by the 115th Infantry. The third battalion on the left held its positions, and on the right were elements of the second and first battalions.

The 58th Brigade made no attack on October 12. Orders of the French 18th Division for October 12 directed the 113th Infantry to attain and hold against all counterattacks the objectives previously assigned. This required no substantial movement by the 113th Infantry during the day. The 114th Infantry, which had crossed the Meuse during the night of October 10-11 and taken a position at Cote des Roches, moved to the Ravin de Coassinvaux during the night of October 11-12, under orders to attack on October 12 for the purpose of breaking the hostile defenses between Bois d'Ormont and Bois de Moirey. To the left of the 114th Infantry, the French 66th Infantry was to organize a defensive line in Bois d'Ormont after it was cleared by the 114th. To the right of the 114th Infantry was the French 77th Infantry.

The 114th Infantry attacked at 7 a. m. to the northeast. The artillery support was ineffective. On the right, the second battalion advanced along the eastern slopes of Ravin de Coassinvaux. Leading elements reached the enemy trenches southeast of Bois d'Ormont, but were driven back by hostile fire from the eastern part of Bois d'Ormont and from Bois de Moirey. Company I was now assigned as reinforcement. Renewed attacks in the afternoon reached trenches near the southwestern edge of Bois de Moirey, but a local counterattack and the failure of the French 77th Infantry on the right to keep up caused a withdrawal of a few hundred meters. The line as finally held represented a net advance for the day of about 700 meters. Contact was secured on the right with the French 77th Infantry.

On the left, the first battalion, 114th Infantry, attacked against Bois d'Ormont. The heights of Bois d'Ormont were strongly held by the enemy, dominating the surrounding country. Several assaults were made during the morning, but were held up by severe machine gun fire from the wood. Company L was now attached to the first battalion as a reinforcement. In mid-afternoon, an attack was launched from the north by Companies A and C and elements of Company L, 113th Infantry, from positions in Bois de la Reine. About 4:45 p. m., these troops reached the northwestern edge of Bois d'Ormont, west of Cote 360. In the meantime, the first battalion, 114th Infantry, had advanced into Bois d'Ormont, the left elements meeting the troops of the 113th Infantry. A north and south line was organized in the wood, and about 10 p. m. the troops of the 113th Infantry returned to their regiment. The 114th Infantry suffered very heavy losses in the day's fighting. The western half of Bois d'Ormont was captured in this operation, but Cote 360 in the eastern half was still held by the enemy. The French 66th Infantry extended the 114th Infantry's line to the northern edge of Bois d'Ormont, and also filled a gap between the first and second battalions, 114th Infantry. The open space between Bois d'Ormont and Bois des Chenes was covered by a patrol from the second battalion, 113th Infantry, which was detached and under command of the first-line battalion, French 66th Infantry.

No attacks were made on October 13 and 14 by troops of the 29th Division, but the time was occupied in consolidating positions. The 29th Division issued orders for a renewal of the attack by the 58th Brigade, directing an advance to the first exploitation objective, on a line running generally east and west from the junction of Ravin de Moyemont and Ravin de la Vaux de Mille-Mais to Point 302. The zones of action of the two regiments were unchanged—namely, 116th Infantry between vertical grid lines 26 and 25, and 115th Infantry between vertical grid lines 25 and 24.

The attack was launched about 8 a. m. on October 15, preceded by an artillery preparation and accompanied by a rolling barrage. The 116th Infantry, with third battalion leading, advanced across the Molleville Ferme clearing in spite of severe hostile fire from Bois de la Grande Montagne in front and from Bultruy Bois on the right flank. By the hardest kind of fighting and with heavy losses, the attack was carried into the southern edge of Bois de la Grande Montagne. Contact was established with the 115th Infantry near the southwestern corner of Bois de la Grande Montagne. The second battalion, 116th Infantry, from support was sent forward to strengthen the right and center of the third battalion, and a line was organized running east and west along the Etraye—Consenvoye road, with the right extending southeasterly through Bultruy Bois to a junction with the 113th Infantry. The second battalion, 115th Infantry, was placed at the disposal of the 116th Infantry and at 7 p. m. entered the line on the left, relieving part of the third battalion, 116th Infantry.

The 115th Infantry attacked at 7:30 a. m., with third battalion plus Company C leading. The 33d Division to the left attacked at 8 a. m. No substantial advance was made by the 115th Infantry on the right of its line, due to the strong opposition in Bois de la Grande Montagne, on the front of the 116th Infantry. The left of the line was advanced about 300 meters, but subsequently withdrawn to the line of departure, maintaining contact with the 33d Division. Regimental post command of the 115th Infantry was moved to the "Dutch Village".

Under orders of the French 18th Division for October 15, the 113th Infantry maintained liaison on the left of its line with the 116th Infantry. This was the only forward movement of the day by the 113th Infantry, and there was no movement by the 114th Infantry. At 8 a. m. on October 15, the 57th Brigade was given command of the zones occupied by the 113th and 114th Infantry and the French 66th Infantry.

The attack was continued by the 58th Brigade on October 16, preceded by an artillery preparation. In the zone of the 116th Infantry, the first battalion took over the right of the line and attacked at 9:30 a. m. At 10:50 a. m., the second battalion, 115th Infantry, on the left joined in the attack. By 4:30 p. m., the advance in Bois de la Grande Montagne had been carried forward about 800 meters on the left, the new line running along the south slope of Hill 370 and thence southeast to the vicinity of the crossroads north of Molleville Ferme. To the right, the second battalion, 113th Infantry, extended its line to maintain contact with the 116th Infantry.

In the zone of the 115th Infantry, the first battalion passed through the third battalion and attacked in conjunction with the 33d Division to the left. The day's advance was about 800 meters to a line joining the second battalion, 115th Infantry, on the right, and running slightly south of west to its junction with the 33d Division. The line receded somewhat in the middle where it crossed Ravin de Moyemont.

The present objective having been reached in this zone, the Grande Montagne Sector was now organized by the 29th Division, effective 8 a. m. October 17, between vertical grid lines 26.5 and 24. The sector was divided into two subsectors, the "Gray" on the east to be occupied by the 57th Brigade, which now reverted to the command of the 29th Division, and the "Blue" on the west to be occupied by the 58th Brigade. The French 18th Division and attached units of the 57th Brigade east of vertical grid line 26.5 were relieved by the American 26th Division. The 114th Infantry was relieved during the nights of October 16-17 and 17-18, going into 29th Division reserve. The 113th Infantry was relieved from that part of the line east of vertical grid line 26.5 on the night of October 17 by the 102d Infantry.

At 5:15 a. m., October 17, on the front of the second battalion, 115th Infantry, a detachment of about 100 Germans was surprised while advancing to make a relief and driven off with considerable losses. During the day, the second battalion, 115th Infantry, was relieved by elements of the 116th Infantry and returned to its own regiment, going into regimental reserve. In the 115th Infantry's sector, the third battalion relieved the first battalion on October 17 and was in turn relieved by the second battalion on October 20.

From October 18 to 22, the lines of the 29th Division remained unchanged. The regiments rotated their front line units. To the left of the 29th Division, the 33d Division was relieved during the night of October 20-21 by the French 15th Colonial Division.

The enemy held strongly the ridge of Bois d'Etraye, extending in an easterly direction from the Molleville Ferme clearing. The Pylone Observatory on Hill 361 gave the enemy excellent observation over a wide area. The capture of this stronghold was necessary before a successful attack on Belleu Bois and a complete conquest of Bois d'Ormont. The attack on the Etraye ridge was executed by the 29th Division, in conjunction with the 26th Division to the right. The right of the zone of action of the 29th Division was a line running east from Molleville Ferme through Bultruy Bois and the northern edge of Le Houppy Bois, then northeast through Bois de Wavrille. The left of the zone of action for the direct attack was a general east and west line running through the observatory on Hill 375 in Bois de la Grande Montagne. The intermediate objective was prescribed as a north and south line about 200 meters west of the crest of Hill 361 and the normal objective as a line running southeasterly along the military crest of Hill 361, about 400 meters east of the actual crest. The line of departure was a north-south line through Molleville Ferme, units in front of this line withdrawing prior to the attack to permit the artillery to carry out its preparation on the enemy front line. The left flank was to be protected by a covering attack to the northeast in Bois de la Grande Montagne, to reach the nose commanding the ravine of Point 302.

The main attack to the eastward was launched at 6:15 a. m. on October 23, preceded by an artillery preparation and accompanied by a rolling barrage. On the right, the 113th Infantry, with first battalion in assault, reached the intermediate objective about 8:30 a. m. After reorganization, the advance was continued and the normal objective reached about 4 p. m. The day's advance was over a kilometer. The line was organized, extending from junction with the 26th Division at the northeast tip of Le Houppy Bois, north to and around the military crest of Hill 361.

To the left of the 113th Infantry, the second battalion, 116th Infantry, also attacked eastward. The first battalion, advancing in support, occupied the line facing north exposed by the advance of the second battalion. The advance ceased about 2:30 p. m. and consolidation began. Contact with the 113th Infantry was secured later in the evening. The line for the night ran from junction with the 113th Infantry, at a point about 100 meters north of the observatory on Hill 361, around the northern slope of the hill, thence slightly south of west crossing the Etraye—Consenvoye road, and then extending north to junction with the 115th Infantry.

For the covering attack, the first battalion, 115th Infantry, relieved a battalion of the 116th Infantry in the line running southeasterly from Hill 370 in Bois de la Grande Montagne. The first battalion, 115th Infantry, attacked about 8 a. m., meeting little difficulty except on the right flank, which was subjected to heavy machine gun fire from Bois d'Etraye. The objective was gained in the main about 10:15 a. m. Contact was secured with the second battalion, 115th Infantry, to the left and with the 116th Infantry to the right. The line was organized for the night around the nose south of Point 302.

Hostile counterattacks were made during the afternoon and evening of October 23 and on the morning of October 24, but were easily repulsed. On the night of October 24, the first battalion, 115th Infantry, was relieved, the second battalion taking over the line to vertical grid line 25.5 and the 116th Infantry taking over the line east of that point. The 113th Infantry was relieved by the 114th Infantry. Effective 6 a. m., October 25, a new right boundary was prescribed for the 29th Division, running northeasterly between Belleu Bois and Bois de Wavrille. The 114th Infantry extended to the southeast about half a kilometer, taking over the additional section of the line. The 114th Infantry also took over from the 116th Infantry during the evening of October 26 part of its line along the north side of Hill 361.

In the further attack by the 26th Division on October 27 against Belleu Bois, the 114th Infantry was ordered to advance its right in conjunction with the 26th Division. The attack was launched at 11 a. m., preceded by a preparatory barrage for which the troops withdrew some distance. While the right elements of the 114th Infantry were returning to their original positions after the preparatory barrage, the enemy counterattacked across this front but was repulsed. The 26th Division advanced some distance in Belleu Bois, but no gain was made by the 114th Infantry nor by the extreme left of the 26th Division.

In the sector of the 115th Infantry, the third battalion relieved the second battalion on October 25. On October 27, the third battalion extended to the right, relieving the 116th Infantry from that part of its line in Bois de la Grande Montagne. On October 28, the 114th Infantry extended to the left, relieving the remaining units of the 116th Infantry. During the night of October 28-29, the 115th and the 116th Infantry were relieved by the 316th Infantry, 79th Division, and during the night of October 29-30, the 114th Infantry was relieved by the 315th Infantry, 79th Division. Command passed to the 79th Division at 8 a. m., October 30, on the front of about 4½ kilometers.

The 29th Division in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive advanced against the enemy a total distance of 7 kilometers and captured 2,187 prisoners. The battle casualties of the division were 732 killed in action, 227 died of wounds and 3,821 wounds not mortal. Many of the combat units, in consequence of the severe fighting and of the extended time that the division was held in the battle-line, lost over one-third of their effectives. The division was supported during these operations by the 158th Field Artillery Brigade (83d Division) and for various periods by the 90th Aero Squadron, the 4th Balloon Company, the 9th Balloon Company and the French 272d Aero Squadron.

Upon withdrawal from the battle-line, the division passed to Army reserve, being attached to the Fifth Corps, and within a few days moved from the vicinity of Verdun to the rest area of Robert Espagne (Meuse). On November 10, the division was ordered to proceed to the front of the American Second Army, but the movement was halted by the Armistice on the next day. The division moved on November 17 to the 11th Training Area, with division headquarters at Bourbonne-les-Bains (Haute Marne).

The 54th Field Artillery Brigade arrived in France by the end of July, 1918. The brigade, accompanied by the major part of the ammunition train, proceeded to the vicinity of Poitiers (Vienne), where a few French guns were received and preliminary instruction in their use. On August 25, the brigade moved to the artillery training area at Camp de Meucon (Morbihan). Here the full equipment of French guns was received and the training schedule completed. The brigade entrained on November 10, presumably for the front, but was halted at Liffol-le-Grand (Vosges) on November 11, due to the Armistice. The brigade remained in the 4th Training Area for a few weeks, rejoining the division early in December in the 11th Training Area.

On April 12, 1919, the division moved to the LeMans (Sarthe) embarkation center. The various elements of the division, with a few exceptions, sailed from St. Nazaire at dates from April 24 to May 13, landing at New York or at Newport News. The Maryland men were sent to Camp Meade, where demobilized early in June.

The record of division and brigade commanders, without showing officers merely acting in the absence of the regular commanders, is as follows:

115TH INFANTRY

The 115th Infantry was organized at Camp McClellan, October 1, 1918, as part of the 58th Infantry Brigade. It was the only major unit of the 29th Division formed entirely of Maryland troops. The new regiment was twice the size of the former National Guard regiments, the strength of a rifle company being now 6 officers and 250 enlisted men. Headquarters Company, especially, was an enormously enlarged unit comprising, in addition to band and office force as before, important new elements including pioneer platoon, signal platoon, one-pounder platoon, Stokes-mortar platoon—total strength, 7 officers and 315 enlisted men. The National Guard units entering into the formation of the 115th Infantry were as follows: 1st Maryland Infantry, less Company H; 5th Maryland Infantry, less Headquarters, Supply and Machine Gun Companies; 4th Maryland Infantry, less band, Machine Gun Company and Companies A, B, D, E, F, H and I. It consisted largely of a merger of the 1st and 5th Maryland Regiments, plus increments from the 4th. In May, 1918, several hundred drafted men were received, mostly from New York and the Middle West, to fill up the regiment, which had been depleted by withdrawal of contingents from time to time during the period of training at Camp McClellan.

The 115th left Camp McClellan on June 9, 1918, and sailed from New York on June 15, landing at Brest, France, on June 27. On July 3, the regiment arrived at Champlitte (Haute Saone) in the Prauthoy (Haute Marne) training area, leaving there on July 17 for the Alsace front.

From July 18 to 22, the regiment was stationed at La Chapelle-sous-Chaux, in the vicinity of Belfort, thence advancing to position in the battle line. The 115th was affiliated at first with the French 319th Infantry, with regimental post command at Brechaumont, but on August 9 the 115th took over entire control of its sector. The third battalion was the first unit to enter the line on the night of July 27-28 in the Gildwiller sector, and the second battalion on the following night in the Balschwiller sector, the first battalion being held in reserve. A machine gun company was attached to each battalion.

On the morning of July 31, the enemy executed a raid in the sector held by Company K, 115th Infantry, which was gallantly repulsed. The first battalion relieved the third battalion on the night of August 13-14. Patrols were sent out frequently across "no man's land". A specially trained raiding party from the third battalion was sent out on the nights of August 17-18 and August 18-19, but on both occasions was obliged to return at the approach of dawn without having reached the enemy lines. The regiment was relieved during the nights of August 21-22 and August 22-23 by the 116th Infantry. The 115th, with regimental headquarters at Reppe, was now in reserve to the 116th. A specially trained raiding party from the third battalion of the 115th was sent out during the night of August 30-31 in the sector of the 116th. This party reached the German trenches but failed in its mission to take prisoners.

During the nights of September 5-6 and 6-7, the 115th in turn relieved the 116th, the first battalion occupying the Balschwiller sector and the third battalion the Gildwiller sector, the second battalion being in reserve. Numerous patrols were sent out, scouring "no man's land". A patrol from the first battalion on the night of September 16-17 actually entered the enemy trenches and ambushed an enemy party. The second battalion relieved the third battalion September 16-17. On September 17-18, the enemy directed a heavy artillery and gas projector fire against the sector of the second battalion, which resulted in many casualties. During this period, activities were conducted on this front to give the enemy the impression that a major attack was in preparation. The 115th was relieved on the nights of September 20-21 and 21-22 by the French 10th Chasseurs. Moving to the rear, the regiment was billeted in Bessoncourt and nearby towns.

On September 24, the 115th entrained for the American First Army area, where regimental headquarters were at first established at Seigneuelles (Meuse). On September 29, the regiment began its march to the front, arriving at Nixeville on October 1, and on October 4 proceeding to Bois de Bourrus, northwest of Verdun. In addition to the battle casualties in the Alsace sector, the regiment had suffered heavy losses from sickness due to fatigue and exposure.

During the night of October 7-8, the 58th Brigade moved into position east of the Meuse River for the attack on October 8. The participation of the 115th Infantry in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive has already been covered as part of the 29th Division.

The 115th Infantry was relieved from the line in the Grande Montagne sector by the 316th Infantry (79th Division) during the night of October 28-29, withdrawing to Cote des Roches and on the following night to Verdun. On the night of October 30, the 115th moved a few miles farther to the rear and on the following day proceeded to the rest area of Robert Espagne (Meuse), where regimental headquarters were located in the village of Beurey. Nearly 1,000 replacements were now received. On November 11, the regiment was ready to leave under orders for the Second Army front, but this movement was halted by the Armistice.

The regiment left Beurey on November 17 for its permanent billeting area in the vicinity of Bourbonne-les-Bains (Haute Marne), where regimental headquarters were located at Fresnes-sur-Apance.

After long waiting, the regiment proceeded April 14-16 to the Le Mans (Sarthe) embarkation area, with regimental headquarters at Bonnetable, and on April 28-29 to St. Nazaire. The 115th sailed from St. Nazaire on May 11 and landed at Newport News on May 24. After a few days at Camp Stuart, the troops proceeded to Camp Meade and were demobilized early in June.

The 115th Infantry made a splendid record. The total battle casualties of the regiment were 162 killed in action, 56 died of wounds, and 759 wounds not mortal. Colonel Reckord was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for his "qualities of high military leadership and great tactical ability". Of three Congressional Medals of Honor awarded in the 29th Division, two were won by members of the 115th Infantry—namely, Lieutenant Patrick Regan and Private Henry G. Costin. Of 150 Distinguished Service Crosses awarded in the division, 49 were to members of this regiment. The colors of the 115th Infantry were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

110TH MACHINE GUN BATTALION

The 110th Machine Gun Battalion was organized at Camp McClellan, October 1, 1917, as the divisional machine gun battalion. The battalion was formed largely as follows: headquarters detachment by individual transfers from the 4th Maryland Infantry; Company A from Machine Gun Company, 1st Delaware Infantry; Company B from Machine Gun Company, 4th New Jersey Infantry; Company C from Machine Gun Company, 5th Maryland Infantry; Company D from Machine Gun Company, 1st Virginia Infantry; plus individual transfers to fill up the several companies. In January, 1918, the original Company A was transferred to another camp and a new Company A was formed by drawing every fourth man on the rosters of the remaining companies. On February 26, 1918, the battalion was changed from four-company animal-drawn to two-company motorized, Company B being transferred to the 111th Machine Gun Battalion and Company D to the 112th Machine Gun Battalion. The designation of Company C was changed to Company B. On March 4, 1918, a group of men were transferred from the 115th Infantry to the 110th Machine Gun Battalion, 36 being assigned to Company A and 25 to Company B. The battalion strength at embarkation for overseas was 360, of whom 205 were Marylanders.

The battalion sailed from Newport News on June 15 and landed at Brest, France, on June 27. On July 3, the battalion arrived in the Prauthoy (Haute Marne) training area, being billeted at Boussenois, and on July 18 proceeded to Giromagny in the Belfort area.

On July 25 and 26, the battalion marched to the front, establishing headquarters at Joncherey. Company A entered the line on the night of July 29 near Seppois le Bas, being relieved after a few days by Company B. On August 9, the battalion moved to Bessoncourt. Company B entered the line on September 7 at Badricourt. Company A also went to the front several times a week to lay down harassing fire. Upon relief from the Alsace sector on September 22, the battalion proceeded to the First Army area, arriving at Rembercourt (Meuse) on September 26 and 27.

The battalion started to the front on September 30. On the night of October 7, the battalion marched from Verdun to Bois de Loline, on the next morning to Cumieres, and on the night of October 8 to Samogneux. On October 14, the battalion moved forward to Bois de Consenvoye, and during the night Company A entered the front line, being relieved on October 17 by Company B. On October 22, Company A joined Company B and next morning both companies participated in the harassing barrage preparatory to the attack on the Etraye ridge, after which they were withdrawn. Later on the same day, Company B took up a support position in the forward edge of Bois de Consenvoye. The battalion was relieved on the night of October 28, and retired the next day to Moulin Brule. During its combat service, the 110th Machine Gun Battalion used Vickers guns, having twelve active guns to a company. After the Armistice, the battalion was equipped with heavy Brownings.

On November 1, the battalion moved to Mussey in the Robert Espagne (Meuse) area. Orders to proceed to the Second Army front on November 11 were cancelled due to the Armistice. The battalion left shortly for its permanent billeting area in the vicinity of Bourbonne-les-Bains (Haute Marne), arriving at Fresnes-sur-Apance on November 21. The battalion moved to the LeMans (Sarthe) embarkation area on April 14, 1919, sailed from St. Nazaire on May 8, landed at New York May 20, arrived at Camp Meade on May 25, where demobilized early in June.

The battle casualties of the 110th Machine Gun Battalion were 5 killed in action, 3 died of wounds, 67 wounds not mortal. Three members of the battalion were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross. The colors of the 110th Machine Gun Battalion were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

Major James H. Washburn was battalion commander from organization until just before return to the United States.

112TH MACHINE GUN BATTALION

The 112th Machine Gun Battalion was organized at Camp McClellan, October 1, 1917, as part of the 58th Infantry Brigade. The battalion was formed largely as follows: headquarters detachment by individual transfers from the Maryland National Guard; Company A from Machine Gun Company, 4th Maryland Infantry; Company B from Machine Gun Company, 4th Virginia Infantry; Company C from Company H, 1st Maryland Infantry; Company D from Machine Gun Company, 1st Virginia Infantry; plus individual transfers to fill up the several companies. Company D was added to the battalion in February, 1918, by transfer of Company D, 110th Machine Gun Battalion. In May, 1918, a large number of drafted men were received, mostly from New York and the Middle West, as replacements to fill up the battalion. In France, the battalion received 51 replacements while in the Alsace sector and 145 in November after withdrawal from the Meuse-Argonne. The total strength of the battalion in December, 1918, was 760, of whom 232 were from Maryland and 163 from Virginia.

The battalion left Camp McClellan on June 12, 1918, and sailed from New York on June 15, landing at Brest, France, on June 27. On July 3, the battalion arrived in the Prauthoy (Haute Marne) training area, being billeted in the village of Occey, and on July 18 proceeded to Rougegoutte in the Belfort area.

On July 24, the battalion was ordered into position at the front, the first units entering the line on July 27. The several companies were attached to battalions of the 115th Infantry and 116th Infantry. The battalion post command was located at La Chapelle-sous-Rougemont. On August 7, a revised plan became effective whereby all machine gun units of the 58th Infantry Brigade, including the machine gun companies of the two infantry regiments as well as the four companies of the machine gun battalion, were grouped under the control of the brigade machine gun officer, who was the commanding officer of the machine gun battalion. The six companies were disposed taking turns with two companies in the front line, one in support, and three in reserve. The battalion headquarters were located at Fraix. A systematic plan was carried out nightly of harassing fire on points in the enemy lines, based on intelligence reports. The machine guns were active, also, in directing fire on enemy patrols and raiding parties and in providing a covering barrage for raiding parties from their own lines. On September 17, battalion headquarters were withdrawn to Evette, two companies however remaining at the front until September 21. Leaving the Alsace sector on September 24, the battalion proceeded to the First Army area, arriving at Rembercourt (Meuse) on September 27.

The battalion started to the Verdun front on September 30, moving to Souhemes and by night march of October 3 to Bois de Loline, near Verdun. During the night of October 7, the battalion moved into position for the attack next morning east of the Meuse. Two companies were attached to battalions of the 115th Infantry and two companies to battalions of the 116th Infantry. The battalion headquarters were consolidated with headquarters of the 58th Infantry Brigade. After the initial advance on October 8, the brigade and battalion post command was established at Cote des Roches. In the attack, the machine gun company with the advance infantry battalion was disposed with one platoon on each flank of the assaulting companies and the third platoon with the support companies. On October 9, this was modified by consolidating into two platoons and employing the remaining men of the company as ammunition carriers. The principal mission of the machine guns was to cover the advance of the infantry by direct overhead fire and also to protect the flanks. The machine guns were employed also in harassing fire on the enemy lines. Remarkable exploits were by Company A on October 8 and by Company C on October 9, in capturing without infantry assistance machine gun nests containing 4 and 7 guns, respectively, and taking 30 prisoners. In both instances, the machine guns of the attacking troops were mounted on parapets, and fired directly into the enemy nests. The machine gun units, serving by turns, were engaged in battle more than any infantry units. During its combat service in France, the 112th Machine Gun Battalion used Vickers guns, having twelve active guns to a company. After the Armistice, the battalion was equipped with heavy Brownings.

On October 28, the battalion was withdrawn to Cote des Roches upon relief by machine gun units of the 158th Infantry Brigade, Company B however remaining with the 115th Infantry until the following day. During the night of October 28, the battalion less the one company marched to Belleville, near Verdun, and on the following night proceeded to Robert Espagne (Meuse), where rejoined by the absent company on November 1. On November 10, the battalion moved to Tremont, where the machine gun units of the 58th Brigade were concentrated for training. The battalion was ready to start on November 11 under orders for the Second Army front, but this movement was halted by the Armistice. The battalion left on November 16 for its permanent billeting area in the vicinity of Bourbonne-les-Bains (Haute Marne), where it was located at Fresnes-sur-Apance. All machine gun units of the 29th Division were concentrated for a time at Fresnes, but owing to congestion the 57th Brigade units were removed and subsequently also the machine gun company of the 116th Infantry.

On April 13, 1919, the battalion moved to the LeMans (Sarthe) embarkation area, being located at Vivoin, and on April 27 proceeded to St. Nazaire. The battalion sailed on May 11, arrived at Newport News on May 24, proceeded to Camp Meade on May 28, demobilized on June 3.

The battle casualties of the 112th Machine Gun Battalion were 15 killed in action, 10 died of wounds and 139 wounds not mortal. The losses in animals were especially severe, including 48 killed and 16 wounded. Major (later Lt. Col.) Markey was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for exceptionally meritorious services as commander of the machine gun battalion and also as acting brigade adjutant during part of the period in the Meuse-Argonne. Four members of the battalion were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross. The colors of the 112th Machine Gun Battalion were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

The record of battalion commanders is as follows:

Major D. John Markey.....	10/1/17
Captain Frank H. Bondurant.....	2/8/19
Major Frank A. Jones.....	3/18/19
Captain Thompson A. Lyon.....	4/27/19

110TH FIELD ARTILLERY

The 110th (originally 112th) Field Artillery was organized at Camp McClellan, October 1, 1917, as part of the 54th Field Artillery Brigade. The regiment was formed largely as follows: Headquarters and Supply Companies from Headquarters and Supply Companies, 5th Maryland Infantry; Battery A from Batteries A and B, District of Columbia Field Artillery; Battery B from Troops A and B, District of Columbia Cavalry; Battery C from Troops C and D, District of Columbia Cavalry; Batteries D, E and F, respectively, from Batteries A, B and C, Maryland Field Artillery. The 4th Maryland Infantry contributed a large number of men to fill up the new artillery regiment. On November 27, 1917, the designation was changed from 112th to 110th Field Artillery. Replacements were received just before leaving Camp McClellan and also in France. The strength of the regiment at embarkation for overseas was 1499, of whom 601 were Marylanders.

The regiment left Camp McClellan on June 18, 1918, for Camp Mills, New York, and after a few days there back-tracked to Baltimore on June 28 and embarked for Halifax, where the transport joined a convoy sailing on July 4. Landing in England on July 15, the regiment crossed to Cherbourg, France, on the night of July 16.

On July 20, the regiment arrived at Poitiers (Vienne) and was billeted in nearby towns and villages, with regimental headquarters at Vouille. In this area, the regiment received its preliminary instruction with the French 75 mm. guns in lieu of the 3-inch guns which had been left behind at Camp McClellan. On August 28, the regiment moved to Camp de Meucon, near Vannes (Morbihan), to complete its training. Here the regiment received its full equipment of French guns. The schedule of training was completed on October 12 and the regiment prepared to leave for the front. Transportation was not available, however, until just before the Armistice. The regiment was en route to the front, arriving at Liffol-le-Grand (Vosges) on the night of November 11 and going into billets at the nearby town of Grand. On November 29, the regiment started its march to join the 29th Division, stopping for several days en route and arriving at its billeting posts in the Bourbonne-les-Bains (Haute Marne) area on December 8. Regimental headquarters were at Aisey (Haute Saone), the second battalion moving on December 12 to Ormoy nearby.

On April 14, 1919, the regiment moved to the LeMans (Sarthe) embarkation area, and on May 6 proceeded to St. Nazaire, sailing on May 12 and arriving at Newport News on May 20. The regiment arrived at Camp Meade on May 27 and was demobilized on June 2. The colors of the 110th Field Artillery were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

The record of regimental and battalion commanders is as follows:

104TH TRAIN HEADQUARTERS AND MILITARY POLICE

The 104th Train Headquarters and Military Police was organized at Camp McClellan, October 1, 1917, consisting of train headquarters and two military police companies. It was formed largely from Troops A and C, New Jersey Cavalry, and Troop A, Maryland Cavalry. Maryland's Troop A was about evenly divided between Companies A and B of the military police battalion. The 104th Train Headquarters and Military Police sailed from New York on July 6, 1918, and landed at Liverpool on July 17, proceeding thence to France to join the division. The total strength at embarkation for overseas was 285, of whom 72 from Maryland. There was attached, also, the 107th Mobile Veterinary Section—total strength 22, of whom 6 from Maryland.

The 104th Military Police rendered splendid service, especially in the Meuse-Argonne, in directing traffic and other military police duties. Upon organization of the Military Police Corps as an independent corps at the end of October, 1918, the 104th Military Police was reorganized, Company A becoming the 29th Military Police Company and Company B being transferred as Company C, 1st Army Military Police Battalion, later 216th Military Police Company. The 216th Company served with the army of occupation in Germany. The 29th Company remained with the division, sailing from St. Nazaire on May 6, 1919, landing at Newport News on May 20, and demobilized at Camp Meade.

Colonel Edward E. Goodwyn was commander of division trains during the entire period. Commanders of the 104th Military Police Battalion: Major Hobart B. Brown to May 1, 1918; Major Russell P. Freeman to September 11, 1918; and Major James A. K. Marshall to the end of October, 1918. Captain Langdon Moore commanded the 29th Military Police Company from November 1, 1918, until just prior to its return to the United States.

104TH AMMUNITION TRAIN

The 104th Ammunition Train was organized at Camp McClellan in October, 1917. The motor battalion was formed by individual transfers from the National Guard of Maryland and of New Jersey, the Maryland men being distributed among the four companies. The horsed battalion of three companies was formed from the 1st Squadron, Virginia Cavalry. Large numbers of men from other States were received as replacements both at Camp McClellan and in France. The total strength at embarkation for overseas was 1328, of whom 152 were Marylanders.

The 104th Ammunition Train left Camp McClellan June 18, sailed from New York June 29, joined a convoy at Halifax sailing July 11, arrived in England July 22, crossing thence to Cherbourg, France, on July 25.

A detachment comprising Companies A and C was sent forward to join the 29th Division at the Alsace front, arriving on August 4 and being billeted at Chevremont. Upon receiving an assignment of trucks, the detachment served the division in this sector. The detachment moved with the division to the First Army area, arriving at Genicourt (Meuse) on September 26. Advancing with the division to the front, the detachment arrived at Nixeville on October 4, and on October 5 set up an ammunition dump at Marre. Advanced dumps were set up first at Vacherauville, then at Samogneux, and on October 12 at Brabant and Haumont. On October 14, the detachment was attached to the 308th Ammunition Train of the 158th Field Artillery Brigade, which served the 29th Division in the Meuse-Argonne. The detachment functioned for a time with only 20 trucks, but later received additional trucks, making a total of 65 trucks for the two companies. Upon being relieved on October 29, the detachment moved with the division to the Robert Espagne (Meuse) area.

The ammunition train, less Companies A and C, proceeded on July 27 to Clan in the vicinity of Poitiers (Vienne) and on August 28 moved with the 54th Field Artillery Brigade to Camp de Meucon, near Vannes (Morbihan). On November 11, the ammunition train started by rail to the front, reaching Vannes that night, where stopped in view of the signing of the Armistice. The ammunition train arrived at Longeville in the Robert Espagne (Meuse) area on November 13, rejoining Companies A and C. On November 22, the ammunition train moved to Jussey (Haute Saone) in the Bourbonne-les-Bains (Haute Marne) area. Train headquarters and the horsed battalion moved on January 2, 1919, a short distance to Villars-St. Marcellin (Haute Marne), the motor battalion remaining at Jussey. The ammunition train, less Company E, arrived at St. Remy in the LeMans (Sarthe) area on April 18, proceeded to St. Nazaire on April 29, sailed on May 11, landed at Newport News on May 21. Company E arrived at Newport News on May 25. The Maryland men in the ammunition train were forwarded to Camp Meade, where demobilized early in June.

The commanders of the 104th Ammunition Train were as follows: Lt. Col. Samuel W. Filbert to January 5, 1918; Lt. Col. William B. Martin to December 28, 1918; Major (later Lt. Col.) James A. K. Marshall to demobilization. The commanders of the motor battalion were as follows: Major Lynwood B. Jacobs to January 9, 1918; Major Conrad Hall to demobilization. Captain Thomas F. Flynn commanded the detachment in the Alsace Sector and in the Meuse-Argonne.

104TH SANITARY TRAIN

The 104th Sanitary Train was organized at Camp McClellan, October 1, 1917. It was formed from the National Guard of Maryland, Virginia and New Jersey, largely as follows: 113th Ambulance Company from 1st Maryland Ambulance Company; 114th Ambulance Company of men from other ambulance companies and from line troops; 115th Ambulance Company from 1st Virginia Ambulance Company; 116th Ambulance Company of men from other ambulance companies and from line troops; 113th Field Hospital from 1st Maryland Field Hospital; 114th Field Hospital from 1st New Jersey Field Hospital; 115th Field Hospital from 1st Virginia Field Hospital; 116th Field Hospital of men from other field hospitals and from line troops. The ambulance section and the field hospital section each comprised three motor companies and one animal-drawn company. The normal equipment of an ambulance company was 12 ambulances in active service. The 1st Maryland Ambulance Company, being converted from an animal-drawn to a motor ambulance company, had an excess of 26 men, who were transferred to the 116th Ambulance Company. The 116th Ambulance Company contained nearly one-half Maryland men and the 114th Ambulance Company nearly one-third. There were only a few Maryland men in the field hospital companies other than the 113th. The total strength of the 104th Sanitary Train at embarkation for overseas was 907, of whom 286 were Marylanders.

There was also a large percentage of Maryland men in the minor units designated as Sanitary Squads Nos. 1 and 2, later Nos. 41 and 42, that were formed in December, 1917, from personnel of the sanitary train and were attached to the sanitary train until December, 1918, when transferred to Base Sections Nos. 1 and 2, respectively.

The 104th Sanitary Train left Camp McClellan on June 21, 1918, sailed from New York on July 5, landing in England on July 12 and crossing thence to Cherbourg, France, on July 15. The sanitary train arrived in the Alsace sector on July 20, being quartered at Denney from July 27 to August 14 and at Chevannes sur l' Etang from August 18 to September 23. The various units of the sanitary train experienced active service in handling the wounded of the division in this sector.

Upon relief from the Alsace sector, the sanitary train moved with the division to the First Army area, being quartered at Conde (Meuse) from September 24 to 29, thence proceeding to the front, arriving on October 5 at Glorieux, outside of Verdun. The divisional triage hospital was located at Glorieux and operated by the 114th Field Hospital Company, reinforced by details from other units of the sanitary train and by division specialists. The 113th, 115th and 116th Field Hospital Companies were held in reserve. From October 12 to 27, however, the 115th Field Hospital was established at Charny for the care of normal sick and slightly gassed, returning them to their organizations in so far as possible.

On the morning of October 8, the 113th and 115th Ambulance Companies moved forward to Charny. The 113th promptly set up a dressing station at Samogneux, and later in the day the 115th set up a station on the Samogneux—Brabant road, just north of Cote des Roches. The 113th station was advanced next day to Brabant and on October 10 to Bois de Consenvoye, leaving a small detachment at Brabant for service in that locality. The location in Bois de Consenvoye was unusually close to the front line and subject to enemy fire, but was held tenaciously until relieved on October 29. On October 10, the 116th Ambulance Company set up a station north of Haumont to serve the 57th Infantry Brigade, and on October 11 the 115th station was moved to the same point. The 116th was withdrawn on October 19 and the 115th station moved back near Brabant.

The main function of the dressing stations was to receive the wounded from the first aid stations and to prepare them for transportation to the triage hospital at Glorieux, a distance of about 11 miles. The litter-bearers of the ambulance companies not only carried the wounded from the first aid stations to the dressing stations, but also in many instances went right up to the front lines and even into "no man's land". The ambulances reached the first aid stations wherever possible, but functioned mainly in transporting the wounded from the dressing stations to the triage hospital.

From October 8 to 29, the divisional triage hospital at Glorieux handled 6,661 cases, of which 4,952 were of the 29th Division. Altogether, 5,500 cases passed through the dressing stations. The transportation from the dressing stations to the triage hospital was performed mainly by the 113th and 115th Ambulance Companies, constituting a remarkable exhibition of devoted service under extremely trying and perilous conditions. The ambulance section of the 116th Company functioned under corps orders in transporting patients from the triage hospital to the evacuation hospitals in the rear. The 114th Ambulance Company remained in reserve at Glorieux for the most part, but furnished special details at various times. Its ambulances, being animal-drawn, were used only for some short hauls over rough roads at the front and in connection with a station for slightly wounded at Charny.

The 104th Sanitary Train was relieved on October 29 and moved to the Robert Espagne (Meuse) area, being quartered in Veel and neighboring villages from October 31 to November 16, thence proceeding to the permanent billeting area in the vicinity of Bourbonne-les-Bains (Haute Marne), arriving on November 22. The ambulance companies were quartered at Melay and the field hospital companies at Voisey. The sanitary train sailed from St. Nazaire on May 11, 1919, and arrived at New York on May 22. The Maryland men were forwarded to Camp Meade, where demobilized early in June.

The battle casualties of the 104th Sanitary Train were 2 killed in action, 3 died of wounds, and 38 wounds not mortal. Four members were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

Lt. Col. J. Harry Ullrich commanded the 104th Sanitary Train from March, 1918, until March, 1919. Major Frederick H. Vinup was director of ambulance companies from March, 1918, until demobilization. Captain Franklin B. Anderson commanded the 113th Ambulance Company and Captain Clarence P. Erkenbrack the 116th Ambulance Company throughout the entire period, and Captain Dwight H. Mohr commanded the 114th Ambulance Company from January, 1918, until February, 1919. Major Henry A. Mitchell commanded the 113th Field Hospital from organization until May, 1919, when promoted to lieutenant colonel and placed in command of the 104th Sanitary Train for return to the United States.

104TH SUPPLY TRAIN

The 104th Supply Train was formed at Camp McClellan in November, 1917, by individual transfers from the National Guard of Maryland, Virginia and New Jersey, the Maryland men being distributed among the six companies. Before leaving Camp McClellan, the supply train was brought up to full strength by replacements, mostly from New York. At the time of embarkation for France in June, 1918, the total strength was 490, of whom 87 from Maryland.

The 104th Supply Train left Camp McClellan June 21, 1918, proceeded to Camp Mills, N. Y., sailed from Philadelphia via Halifax, landing in England and crossing thence to Cherbourg, France, on July 16. Company F joined the 29th Division in the Alsace sector on July 31, Companies D and E a few days later, and headquarters and Companies A, B and C some time afterwards. The 104th relieved the companies of the 305th and 303d Supply Trains that were temporarily serving the division. Headquarters of the supply train were located at Fontaine.

The supply train moved with the division to Conde-en-Barrois (Meuse) in the First Army area, and advanced with the division to the front. From October 10 to 29, an advanced dump was operated at Charny, to which supplies were hauled from the railhead behind Verdun and thence distributed to the ration dumps of the various units at the front. Advanced emergency dumps were placed at Charny and near Samogneux. In addition to hauling quartermaster supplies, the supply train trucks rendered considerable assistance in hauling ammunition. There were altogether 115 supply trucks, but the number in active service at any time was greatly reduced by lack of repairs.

When relieved from the Meuse-Argonne, the supply train moved with the division to Longeville in the Robert Espagne (Meuse) area for a few weeks and thence to Bourbonne-les-Bains (Haute Marne). Late in April, 1919, the supply train proceeded to St. Nazaire and sailed on May 11, landing at New York on May 23. The Maryland men were forwarded to Camp Meade for demobilization.

Major Alvin H. Graff commanded the 104th Supply Train to December 28, 1917, and Major R. Baldwin Myers from that date to demobilization.

CHAPTER VIII

THE 79TH DIVISION, U. S. ARMY

The 79th ("Liberty") Division was organized at Camp Meade, Md., dating from August 25, 1917, when Major General Joseph E. Kuhn assumed command. The units to constitute the division were as follows:

- Headquarters Troop
- 157th Infantry Brigade
 - 313th and 314th Infantry Regiments
 - 311th Machine Gun Battalion
- 158th Infantry Brigade
 - 315th and 316th Infantry Regiments

The initial personnel consisted of a small number of officers of the Regular Army and about 600 enlisted men to form the cadre or framework of the new organization units. On August 29, there reported 1,100 reserve officers, mostly graduates of the training camp at Fort Niagara, N. Y., attended by candidates drawn chiefly from Pennsylvania. There were allotted to the 79th Division the anticipated drafts for 1917 from a designated territory—eastern Pennsylvania 32,643, Maryland 7,096 and District of Columbia 929. Under the original plan, the men from Maryland were assigned as follows: Baltimore and western Maryland to the 313th Infantry; southern Maryland and the eastern shore to the 310th Field Artillery.

The first instalment of 17,000 men arrived in camp September 19 to 30. At the end of November, the divisional strength was 20,000. The process of depletion, however, from which the division was to suffer so severely, had already started with the transfer of 5,000 men to the 82d Division at Camp Gordon, Ga., October 16 to 20. Transfers were made also in December to the 4th Division at Camp Greene, N. C., and from time to time to various other camps. In consequence, the divisional strength, in spite of continued receipts from the draft, was reduced by the end of March to only 15,000. The later contingents were held in large part in the depot brigade and transferred elsewhere without having been assigned to units of the 79th Division.

During April, there were received 8,316 men under a second quota of the draft levied upon the divisional territory, extended to include also West Virginia and Ohio, and late in May about 11,000 men under a third quota from Pennsylvania and Maryland. Transfers to other camps continued, however, including a large contingent (practically all Pennsylvanians) in April to the 28th Division at Camp Hancock, Ga., and a large contingent in May to the 37th Division at Camp Lee, Va. On May 30, the divisional strength was only 13,000. During June, the division was filled up by further drafts and by transfers from other camps. The drafts included some from Maryland and the District of Columbia, and the rest mainly from New York, Ohio, Rhode Island and West Virginia. The division, with normal strength of 27,000, had received over 80,000 men during the period of training in the United States. When the division sailed for France, it was composed 65 per cent of men who had been in the service not over six weeks.

The division, less artillery brigade, ammunition train and supply train, sailed from Hoboken, N. J., July 8 to 10, landing at Brest, France, July 15 to 21. The artillery brigade, ammunition train, and supply train sailed from Philadelphia later in July, landing in England and thence crossing to Le Havre and Cherbourg.

The division, less artillery brigade, ammunition train and supply train, proceeded at the end of July to the 10th Training Area, with headquarters at Prauthoy (Haute Marne). The supply train and three companies of the ammunition train rejoined the division at Prauthoy. The main part of the ammunition train did not rejoin the division until November 3 and the artillery brigade not until January 11.

The division moved on September 8 to Robert Espagne (Meuse), in rear area of the French Second Army, and on September 13 advanced to the Meuse-Argonne front, being placed at the disposition of the French Seventeenth Corps. On September 14, the American Third Corps took over a part of the front of the French Seventeenth Corps, including the front of the French 157th Division. During the nights of September 13-14 and 14-15, the 79th Division relieved elements of the French 157th Division in the Avocourt Sector on a front of 5 kilometers, from a point just south of Haucourt to a point about a kilometer west of Avocourt. In the right half of this sector, the 315th Infantry relieved the French 333d Infantry, and in the left half of the sector the 313th Infantry relieved the American 371st Infantry, which was serving under the French 157th Division. Command of the sector passed to the 79th Division at 8 a. m., September 16, division headquarters being located at Jouy-en-Argonne. On the night of September 19 and in the early morning of September 22, enemy raids were made on the front held by the 313th Infantry.

On September 21, the American First Army assumed control of the entire front from the Moselle River to the Argonne Forest, and the 79th Division passed to the American Fifth Corps. During the night of September 22-23, troops of the 33d Division took over the outpost zone on the front of the 79th Division, which they continued to hold until just before the attack on September 26. During the same night, the 37th Division relieved the 157th Brigade in the left half of the 79th Division sector, the 313th Infantry withdrawing to Bois de Lambechamp. The 158th Brigade continued to hold the right half of the sector.

On September 26, the American First Army attacked along the entire front from the Meuse River to the Argonne Forest. The 79th Division at the jump-off held a line of $2\frac{1}{2}$ kilometers, extending from the forward slope of Hill 304, facing Haucourt, in a southwesterly direction to the vicinity of road junction 266 in Bois d'Avocourt. To the left of the 79th Division was the 37th Division, also of the Fifth Corps, and to the right the 4th Division, of the Third Corps. The zone of action assigned to the 79th Division was as follows: right boundary, Malancourt (incl.)—Cuisy (excl.)—Septsarges (excl.)—Nantillois (incl.)—Cunel (incl.)—Cote 299 (excl.); left boundary, road junction 266 in Bois d'Avocourt (excl.)—Redoute du Golfe (incl.)—Montfaucon (incl.)—Hill 272 (incl.)—point on Cierges to Cunel road one kilometer northeast of Cierges. Directly in the path of the 79th Division lay the height of Montfaucon, the dominating position on this front, where was located an observation tower used by the Crown Prince in directing the German assaults against Verdun in 1916. In the initial advance of the Army, salients were to be driven into the enemy defenses to the east and to the west of Bois de Montfaucon, in order to outflank this strong position. The Army first objective, in the zone of the 79th Division, was a line to the north of Bois des Rappes, about 3 kilometers north of Cunel. Corps orders prescribed as the first day's objective a line running southwesterly through Nantillois, about 9 kilometers from the line of departure.

There was an enormous concentration of artillery for the Meuse-Argonne operation, including army, corps and divisional artillery. Attached to the 79th Division were the 57th Field Artillery Brigade (32d Division) and for various periods between September 26 and 30 additional American and French artillery units, a French aero squadron, some French tanks and Company D, 1st Gas Regiment. Following a heavy preliminary bombardment of several hours' duration, the infantry advanced to the attack at 5:30 a. m., covered by a smoke screen and preceded by a rolling barrage.

In the zone of the 79th Division, the 157th Brigade led the attack, with both regiments in line and the 158th Brigade in support. The 157th Brigade units marched to their positions during the night of September 25-26, passing through the 158th Brigade in the line of resistance and relieving the troops of the 33d Division in the outpost zone. The 314th Infantry on the right placed in the lead its second and third battalions, from right to left. The 313th Infantry on the left placed in the lead its third and second battalions, from right to left. Each forward battalion had one company in assault and one in support. Machine gun units were attached to the forward battalions. The 315th Infantry followed in support of the 314th and the 316th Infantry in support of the 313th.

At first, practically no opposition was encountered and the advance swept over the enemy first line trenches. Due to the extremely difficult terrain, however, the troops failed to keep up with the barrage. This resulted in considerable intermingling of support units with the front line troops. Many hostile machine guns and snipers were passed by the advance units and had to be mopped up by those in the rear. On the right, the 314th Infantry, which had jumped off into a valley running to the northwest, was at first protected somewhat by a fog, but when that lifted encountered severe machine gun fire in fighting its way from Malancourt northward. The heaviest fire came from enemy positions on the slopes of Hill 232, in the 4th Division's zone, and from the head of the Ravin de Moriempre. By nightfall, the 314th Infantry had reached a line about $1\frac{1}{2}$ kilometers north of Nantillois, extending from the northwestern slopes of Hill 281 slightly south of west to the eastern edge of Bois de Cuisy.

The 313th Infantry on the left during the morning worked its way through Bois de Malancourt, but was held up at the northern edge of the woods by severe machine gun fire across the open space beyond from the slopes of Bois de Cuisy. By afternoon, the enemy position in Bois de Cuisy was weakened by the advance on the flanks, and the attack was carried forward with the assistance of a few small tanks. The troops advanced steadily through Bois de Cuisy, but were again held up at the northern edge of the woods. In accordance with corps instructions to push the advance, the 313th Infantry again attacked at 6:10 p. m. towards Montfaucon, without artillery preparation. The first battalion from support joined in this attack. The troops reached the crest of the ridge just beyond Bois de Cuisy, but the advance was stopped there by heavy enemy fire from the slopes and height of Montfaucon. The troops were withdrawn and a line organized along the northern and northeastern edges of Bois de Cuisy, extending from a point about 300 meters west of the divisional boundary to a junction with the 314th Infantry.

The 79th Division, due to the exceptional difficulties encountered, had fallen behind the general advance. Contact was maintained with the 37th Division, but the left of the 4th Division was about 3 kilometers ahead of the right of the 79th Division and not in liaison with it. During the night, the 79th Division received urgent command to push forward at once to a position abreast of the 4th Division in the vicinity of Nantillois. Liaison being broken for several hours between division headquarters and the 157th Brigade commander, orders were issued to the 158th Brigade commander to advance at once with the 314th and the 315th Infantry as a provisional brigade. The 313th and the 316th Infantry were similarly constituted a provisional brigade under the 157th Brigade commander, to whom the orders were conveyed as soon as communication was reestablished.

The 314th Infantry started forward about 4 a. m. on September 27, astride the Malancourt—Montfaucon road, and by daylight crossed the enemy trench system extending from Cote 308 to Bois de Cuisy. At 7 a. m., the attack was resumed by the 314th Infantry, and at the same time the 313th Infantry started to advance. From this point on, the troops not only encountered persistent machine gun fire, but were also subjected to an intense artillery fire. The supporting artillery was unable to keep up with the advance of the infantry. The 314th Infantry carried its attack forward and shortly after noon entered Bois de la Tuilerie, directly east of Montfaucon.

The 313th Infantry, with first and second battalions in assault from right to left and third battalion in support, attacked about 7 a. m., assisted by a few French tanks. A battalion of the divisional artillery had come up and provided a preliminary bombardment of Montfaucon. By 9 a. m., the troops crossed the enemy trenches south of Montfaucon and reached the southern slopes of the hill, which was approached by an enveloping movement. The town of Montfaucon was taken about 11:45 a. m., the second battalion passing through the western side, the third battalion directly through the town and the first battalion to the east of it. A small patrol from the 37th Division had entered the western edge of Montfaucon early that morning. Regimental post command of the 313th was now moved forward to the hill. Following a brief artillery preparation against Bois de Beuge, the 313th Infantry again attacked at 3:30 p. m. The advance was soon stopped by heavy artillery and machine gun fire, although small elements reached the edge of Bois de Beuge. The French tanks failed to continue with the attack. By 6 p. m., efforts to advance were discontinued and a line was organized less than a kilometer north of Montfaucon.

The 314th Infantry was reorganized in Bois de Tuilerie on a single battalion front, and the first battalion, 315th Infantry, was placed in the line on the left. The advance was resumed about 4:30 p. m., but made slow progress against the intense hostile fire. The line for the night rested about a kilometer north of the Septsarges—Montfaucon road, in contact with the 313th Infantry to the left. The 79th Division was still somewhat behind the general advance, but in contact with the divisions to the right and to the left.

During the early morning of September 28, the 315th and the 316th Infantry, respectively, relieved the 314th and the 313th Infantry in the front line. The attack started at 7 a. m., preceded by a weak artillery preparation upon Nantillois and Bois de Beuge. On the right, the 315th Infantry, with third and first battalions in line from right to left, advanced without serious interference until it reached the ridge about a kilometer south of Nantillois. From that point, progress was slow against severe artillery and machine gun fire. Nantillois was entered about 10:50 a. m., and by 1 p. m. the 315th Infantry, in conjunction with the 4th Division to the right, had advanced to Hill 274. Here a reorganization was effected, and at 4 p. m. an attack was made, with the assistance of a few tanks, against Bois des Ogons and Ferme de la Madeleine. Leading elements reached the wood, but the enemy fire was so intense that no gains past Hill 274 could be held. Some of the tanks were put out of action and the rest withdrew. At 6 p. m., another attempt was made to advance, but again without holding any gains. A defensive position was organized behind the ridge of Hill 274. The line was in contact with the 4th Division to the right, at a point about 400 meters west of the divisional boundary.

On the left, the 316th Infantry, with third and first battalions in line from right to left, attacked towards Bois de Beuge. The enemy fire was intense throughout the day's fighting. At 8:50 a. m., leading elements reached the southern edge of Bois de Beuge. In conjunction with a similar advance by the 37th Division to the left, Bois de Beuge was cleared of the enemy about noon. The 316th Infantry pressed forward, reaching the wood on Hill 268 about 2 p. m. Here a badly-needed reorganization was effected. Some elements of the regiment pushed ahead to the wood on Hill 250, but were later withdrawn. A further attack was projected, to be supported by tanks, but was not made that day. The line was consolidated in the northern edges of the woods on the ridge line of Hill 261 and Hill 268, thence extending southeast along Hill 287 to junction with the 315th Infantry in the vicinity of the Nantillois—Cunel road. Contact was maintained with the 37th Division to the left.

The attack was renewed at 7 a. m. on September 29, preceded by an ineffective artillery preparation. The hostile fire was even more intense than on the preceding days, and the counter-artillery fire was entirely inadequate. On the right, the 315th Infantry attacked with the assistance of tanks against Bois des Ogons and Ferme de la Madeleine. Three attempts were made during the morning. The line of farthest advance was midway through Bois des Ogons, but it was impossible to hold the positions. About 11:30 a. m. the 315th Infantry, badly disorganized, withdrew to Hill 274. Recognizing the futility of further attempts without adequate artillery support, the division commander at 12:55 p. m. issued orders to both brigades to withdraw to a defensive position in front of the line Nantillois—Bois de Beuge. During the afternoon, the 314th Infantry organized a line along the ridge just northwest of Nantillois, from a point about 500 meters west of the division boundary to the eastern edge of Bois de Beuge. About 6 p. m., the 315th Infantry withdrew from Hill 274, passing rearward through the 314th Infantry. The 4th Division now further extended its line westward about 400 meters along Hill 274. The 314th Infantry right was about 600 meters in the rear of the 4th Division left.

On the left, the 316th Infantry, in the same formation as on the day before, attacked from the northern edge of the woods on Hills 268 and 261. The first battalion on the left advanced about 400 meters, but was unable to make any further progress. Part of the third battalion on the right, and a platoon of machine guns, pushed ahead into the woods on Hill 250. This small force held its advanced position throughout the day, working its way to the northern edge of the woods.

Regimental post command of the 313th Infantry had moved forward to Bois de Beuge, and the regiment was following in support of the 316th Infantry. About noon, the 313th Infantry was ordered by the brigade commander to pass through the badly-shattered 316th Infantry and to continue the attack. The 313th Infantry, with first and second battalions leading from right to left, advanced into the woods on Hill 250, but bearing too far to the northeast, passed to the right of the positions that troops of the third battalion, 316th Infantry, had held since morning, unaware of their presence. Leading elements of the 313th Infantry were facing Ferme de la Madeleine, when the message reached the regiment about 4 p. m. ordering a withdrawal to a defensive position along the northern edge of Bois de Beuge.

Meanwhile, the remnants of the 316th Infantry were assembled as a single battalion, which was ordered to follow the 313th Infantry in its attack. Losing contact with the 313th in the woods on Hill 250, and bearing to the left, this force joined the elements of the third battalion, 316th Infantry, in their advanced position. The advance was pressed to the northern edge of the woods, being the deepest salient into the enemy's lines along the entire front in the first phase of the Meuse-Argonne Offensive. About 9:30 p. m., a messenger finally reached this force with orders to retire to the defensive position in the northern edge of Bois de Beuge. This defensive line had been organized with the 313th Infantry on the right, in contact with the 314th Infantry, and with elements of the 316th Infantry on the left, in liaison with the 37th Division.

The 79th Division was relieved by the 3d Division on September 30, withdrawing to Malancourt for the night, and on October 1 moving to the rear in the vicinity of Jouy-en-Argonne, in rear area of the Third Corps. The division was completely exhausted as the result of four days of the severest fighting under the most trying conditions, the effectives being reduced to less than fifty per cent. After the first leap, the attack was carried forward only by dogged persistence in the face of a thoroughly prepared and extremely effective machine gun defense. In addition, the troops suffered severely under the enemy artillery fire from commanding positions not only in front, but also on the heights east of the Meuse, the whole area of operations being subject to heavy shelling. As the attack advanced, the problem of transportation and supply over the few shell-torn roads became extremely difficult. In spite of the splendid efforts of the engineers and of the supply services, the congestion and delay was serious, and the men at the front lacked food and ammunition. The 79th Division in this operation advanced 10 kilometers and captured about 900 prisoners. The attack was not resumed by the American First Army until October 4, after adequate artillery preparation.

On October 3, the 79th Division proceeded to the zone of the French Second Colonial Corps, north of St. Mihiel. On the night of October 7-8, the 79th Division relieved the 26th Division in the Troyon Sector on a 9 kilometer front extending southeasterly from Fresnes-en-Woevre. Two French battalions at first occupied the outposts, but were relieved on the nights of October 8-9 and 9-10 by elements of the 79th Division. The front was divided into two subsectors. The original brigades were reconstituted on October 10, so that the 157th Brigade held the left subsector and the 158th Brigade held the right subsector, each brigade having one regiment in the line. The line of resistance extended along the ridge of the Cotes des Meuse, commanding the terrain beyond and causing the German lines at this point to be withdrawn about 6 kilometers. The American outpost line was accordingly advanced about 3 kilometers. There were frequent artillery bombardments on both sides, skirmishes by patrols, and occasional raids. During the period in the Troyon Sector, there were attached to the 79th Division from October 8 to 11 the 51st Field Artillery Brigade of the 26th Division, and from October 11 to 25 the 55th Field Artillery Brigade of the 30th Division. The 79th Division's sector was at the extreme left of the portion of the front that was transferred on October 12 from the American First Army to the newly-created Second Army. During the nights of October 17-18 and 18-19, the 79th Division extended its front an additional 2 kilometers to the southeast, relieving a regiment of the French 2d Dismounted Cavalry Division in the Thillot subsector. The 79th Division was relieved by the 33d Division on the nights of October 23-24 and 24-25.

The 79th Division withdrew to stations in the vicinity of Dieue-sur-Meuse, in rear area of the French Seventeenth Corps. About 2,200 replacements were now received, bringing the units nearly to war strength. These replacements were mostly men with only a short period of training, drawn chiefly from the far western and southern parts of the United States.

The division was shortly ordered again to the front in the zone of the French Seventeenth Corps east of the Meuse River. Division headquarters were established at Vacherauville. The 158th Brigade relieved the 29th Division in the Grande Montagne Sector, the 316th Infantry taking over the left half of the sector on the night of October 28-29, and the 315th Infantry taking over the right half of the sector on the night of October 29-30, each regiment placing two battalions in the line. Command passed to the 158th Brigade at 8 a. m., October 30, on a front of over 4½ kilometers, extending from a point 1 kilometer northwest of Hill 382, generally eastward along the northern edges of Bois Plat Chene and through the southern parts of Bois de la Grande Montagne and of Bois d'Etraye to Hill 361, thence southeasterly to the northwest corner of Belleu Bois. On the night of October 31-November 1, the 157th Brigade relieved the left brigade of the 26th Division on a front of over 2 kilometers, curving outward through Belleu Bois and thence running southerly along the eastern edge of Bois des Chenes and through Bois d'Ormont. The first battalion, 313th Infantry, was placed in the line on the right in Bois d'Ormont, and two battalions of the 314th Infantry on the left in Bois des Chenes and Belleu Bois. Command passed to the 157th Brigade at 6 a. m., November 1. The 79th Division now held a front of about 7 kilometers, with the 26th Division to the right and the French 15th Colonial Division to the left in the zone extending to the Meuse River. The 52d Field Artillery Brigade was attached to the 79th Division from October 29 to November 23.

The attack east of the Meuse, inaugurated on October 8 by the French Seventeenth Corps, under command of the American First Army, met a considerable initial success and by the end of the month achieved a maximum advance of about 8 kilometers. It was impossible, however, to complete the conquest of the dominating heights east of the Meuse, until outflanked by the advance west of the river. On November 1, the American First Army launched its final attack west of the Meuse, which in the first two days drove the enemy from his last strongholds and started a general retrograde movement. The French Seventeenth Corps was now ordered to exert pressure upon its front. The enemy still held strongly east of the Meuse, and the entire area of operations of the Seventeenth Corps was subject to severe artillery fire from the heights to the north and the northeast.

On November 3, reconnaissances in force were made by the left brigade of the 79th Division and by the French 15th Colonial Division. During the preceding night, a readjustment of the front line had been effected by the 158th Brigade, so that the brigade front was now held by two battalions—namely, first battalion, 315th Infantry, on the right, and third battalion, 316th Infantry, on the left. A kilometer in front of the 316th Infantry rose the high ridge of Hill 378, also known as La Borne de Cornouiller, the key to the enemy defense east of the Meuse. The attack on November 3 started at 6 a. m., with artillery support. Three strong patrols, made up from the second battalion, 316th Infantry, with attached machine gun sections, advanced on the front of the 316th Infantry. In the face of severe machine gun resistance, these troops fought their way during the day to positions on the south slope of Hill 370 on the right and well advanced toward Hill 378 on the left.

On November 4, at 6 a. m., the 158th Brigade attacked along its entire front, in conjunction with the French 15th Colonial Division. The attack was preceded by a brief preparation fire and covered by a rolling barrage. On the right, the first battalion, 315th Infantry, encountered intense machine gun fire and was unable to make any permanent gains. Having suffered severely, this battalion was relieved by the second battalion, 315th Infantry. The 316th Infantry attacked with third and first battalions in line, from right to left. The third battalion met comparatively slight resistance and quickly reached its objective, a line running northwesterly from Hill 370 to the southeast base of Hill 378. The first battalion reached the summit of Hill 378, but suffered heavy losses from intense hostile fire and counterattacks, and was forced to fall back to a line about 300 meters south of the crest.

The attack against Hill 378 was continued at 9 a. m. on November 5, with a provisional battalion, 316th Infantry, including Company K, 315th Infantry, in assault. During the day's fighting, the enemy was completely dislodged from the summit of the hill, but the hostile fire swept the bare ridge with such devastating effect that a line was consolidated just south of the crest. The 316th Infantry, especially, was badly depleted, and the extended front of the 158th Brigade was thinly held.

A continuation of the attack was ordered for November 6. The second battalion, 313th Infantry, which had reported to the 158th Brigade on November 5, was designated as the assault battalion, with the third battalion, 315th Infantry, in support. These units, however, came under heavy fire while advancing to their positions, and did not reach the front line until late in the afternoon. The elements of the 316th Infantry were relieved at 6 p. m. on the southern slope of Hill 378. No attack was made on that day.

Meanwhile, the right of the Third Corps on November 5 crossed the Meuse River above Dun-sur-Meuse and by night of November 6 reached a line 8 kilometers east of the river, thus forcing the enemy to begin a general withdrawal from the heights of the Meuse.

The French Second Colonial Corps, which now succeeded the French Seventeenth Corps in command, ordered a continuation of the attack on November 7 by the 79th Division and the French 15th Colonial Division. On the 158th Brigade right, patrols from the second battalion, 315th Infantry, found the enemy holding in force, and the line here was not advanced. On the 158th Brigade left, the attack was executed by a brigade detachment, comprising the second battalion, 313th Infantry, in assault, and the third battalion, 315th Infantry, in support with the mission of protecting the right flank as the advance proceeded. The attack was launched at 8:10 a. m., preceded by a preparation fire and covered by a barrage. Some machine gun resistance was encountered, but practically no hostile artillery fire, indicating that the enemy guns were being withdrawn. The attack was carried forward over Hill 378 and at 10 a. m. reached the first objective, about a kilometer north of the hill. In the afternoon, the advance was continued to the second objective, a kilometer farther to the north. Shortly after dark, the trenches at Les Clairs Chenes were captured, elements of the support battalion assisting on the right. A line was established running southeasterly in La Vaux Rougieux ravine, with the right flank bending to the south. Elements of the first battalion, 313th Infantry, which reported to the 158th Brigade on November 7, were placed in the line facing east, to the right of the third battalion, 315th Infantry. On the left of the 158th Brigade, contact was maintained with the French 15th Colonial Division, which had swung to the northeast and joined up with the Third Corps.

On the night of November 7-8, the third battalion, 314th Infantry, relieved the second battalion, 315th Infantry, in Bois de Waville and Bois d'Etraye. By corps orders, the third battalion, 103d Infantry, and the third battalion, 104th Infantry, of the 26th Division, were attached to the 157th Brigade on November 7. The third battalion, 104th Infantry, took over the line in Bois d'Ormont, relieving the third battalion, 313th Infantry.

Corps orders for November 8 directed a continuation of the advance in an easterly direction. The left boundary of the 79th Division was to be the Harau-mont—Ecurey road, exclusive. The 79th Division ordered the 158th Brigade to start the advance at 6 a. m. The 158th Brigade was formed into two provisional regiments. The 1st Provisional Regiment, comprising the second battalion, 313th Infantry, in assault, the third battalion, 315th Infantry, in support, and a provisional battalion, 316th Infantry, in reserve, was to advance between the left divisional boundary and the Sillon—Fontaine Ferme—Reville road. The 2d Provisional Regiment, comprising the first battalion, 315th Infantry, in assault, the first battalion, 313th Infantry, in support, and the second battalion, 315th Infantry, in reserve, was to advance between the Sillon—Fontaine Ferme—Reville road and the Consenvoye—Etraye road. The rest of the 316th Infantry and the third battalion, 313th Infantry, were in brigade reserve. The objective of the advance was the line Ecurey—Reville—Etraye.

On the left, the 1st Provisional Regiment swung to the right until in north and south line with the 2d Provisional Regiment, whereupon both regiments advanced eastward. The enemy were found to have withdrawn from this area. The left regiment advanced through Bois d'Ecurey and by late afternoon reached the eastern edge of the heights between Ecurey and Reville, in contact with the French 15th Colonial Division to the north. The right regiment similarly pressed its way through Bois de la Grande Montagne and reached the eastern edge of the heights between Reville and Etraye.

From November 1 to 7, the 157th Brigade undertook no advance in its sector, but actively patrolled its front. The troops suffered from the enemy shelling, both in the front line and in the rear. The orders for November 8 at first directed the 157th Brigade to patrol actively in order to keep contact with the enemy on its front. Shortly after noon on November 8, however, the left wing of the 157th Brigade was ordered to swing to the northeast and to advance in liaison with the 158th Brigade. The third battalion, 314th Infantry, accordingly advanced through Bois d'Etraye and Bois de Wavrille to the eastern edge of the heights south of Etraye. In mid-afternoon, the brigade right joined in the advance eastward, the first and second battalions, 314th Infantry, moving forward from Belleu Bois and Bois des Chenes, and the third battalion, 104th Infantry, from Bois d'Ormont. The line was advanced to the ridge overlooking Crepion. Contact was established to the right with the 26th Division, which had also advanced in Bois de Moirey. The 79th Division front on the night of November 8 extended generally north and south about $7\frac{1}{2}$ kilometers along the eastern edge of the heights facing the valley of the Thinte.

The advance eastward continued on November 9. The zone of action assigned to the 79th Division was as follows: right boundary, a line extending northeasterly to and around the north side of Moirey, thence southeasterly to a point south of Azannes, thence slightly north of east out into the plains of the Woivre; northern boundary, a line extending slightly south of east from Etraye to the south base of Cote d'Orne, thence slightly north of east out into the plains of the Woivre. The line of departure was the present front of the 157th Brigade. The 158th Brigade was required to move southward into the new divisional zone south of Etraye, and thereupon to take over the left half of the line from the 157th Brigade. The French 15th Colonial Division was to extend southward to the new boundary.

The 157th Brigade front of nearly $4\frac{1}{2}$ kilometers was held by the 314th Infantry, with its three battalions in line. During the night of November 8-9, the second battalion, 314th Infantry, extended to the right, taking over the section of the line held by the third battalion, 104th Infantry. The two battalions from the 26th Division were thereupon returned to their proper commands. The attack was launched by the 314th Infantry at 6 a. m. on November 9, with artillery support. At first, little resistance was encountered, and by 10:15 a. m. the advance was carried about two kilometers, taking Crepion and Wavrille and reaching the Moirey—Damvillers road. In accordance with orders, the second and third battalions on the right and left, respectively, now extended their lines towards the centre, enabling the first battalion to withdraw into reserve. The hostile artillery and machine gun fire from the hills to the east became increasingly severe. The right wing pressed on, crossing the Thinte and by dark reaching the lower slopes of Cote 328. The center and left were held up west of the Thinte. The line extended half a kilometer north of the divisional boundary to a point just southwest of Damvillers, where contact was established with the French 15th Colonial Division. To the south, there was a gap of about $1\frac{1}{2}$ kilometers between the 79th and the 26th Divisions.

During the morning of November 9, the 158th Brigade executed its march southward into the new divisional zone. The 313th Infantry was returned to the 157th Brigade. The 158th Brigade prepared to take over the left half of the divisional front from the 157th Brigade. The first battalion, 315th Infantry, organized a line behind the third battalion, 314th Infantry, to the north of Wavrille. At 7 p. m. the third battalion, 314th Infantry, withdrew through the lines of the 315th Infantry and passed into reserve of its own regiment.

The attack was continued on November 10, the main effort being directed by the 157th Brigade against Hill 328 and Cote 319, while the 158th Brigade was to carry out demonstrations against the hills on its front and to occupy them if the resistance proved weak. After a heavy preliminary bombardment, the 314th Infantry attacked at 6 a. m., with second battalion leading and first battalion in support, and quickly captured Hill 328. The first battalion, also, now entered the line of assault. The advance was held up by intense hostile fire from Cote 319 ahead and from the hills to the north and northeast. Efforts against Cote 319 were fruitless until the requisite artillery support was secured. Following an effective bombardment, the 314th Infantry attacked at 4:20 p. m., capturing Cote 319 and organizing a line along the slopes of the hill, facing north and east. Patrols were in liaison with the 26th Division near Ville-devant-Chaumont.

On the left, the 315th Infantry, with first battalion in assault, started forward at 7 a. m., crossing the Thinte and attacking toward Cote d'Orne and Cote de Morimont. Assaults reached the western slope of Cote d'Orne, but were stopped by the intense hostile fire. A line was organized for the night south of Damvillers, along the east bank of the Thinte. The front of the 315th Infantry still extended about 300 meters beyond the divisional boundary, in liaison with the French in Damvillers. During the day, the second battalion, 316th Infantry, advanced between the 315th and the 314th, and at night held about half a kilometer of line east of Gibercy. There was a gap of over half a kilometer to the right and to the left of the second battalion, 316th Infantry.

Orders for November 11 directed a renewal of the attack at 9:30 a. m., the 158th Brigade to continue the pressure against the hills on its front, and the 157th Brigade to exert pressure against Cote de Romagne and to advance to the southeast for the capture of Azannes in connection with the operations of the 26th Division. In order to avoid further frontal attacks against Cote d'Orne, which was properly outside of the divisional zone, the 315th Infantry made a flanking movement of 2 kilometers to the south and then advanced, with first battalion in assault, astride the road running northeast from Gibercy. The leading elements reached the slopes of Cote de Morimont.

The 314th Infantry, with second and first battalions in assault from right to left, attacked toward Cote de Romagne, reaching the base of the hill. This was the deepest salient into the enemy lines along this front. To the right, the first battalion, 313th Infantry, had entered the line between Chaumont-devant-Damvillers and Ville-devant-Chaumont, and was advancing toward Azannes, with the mission also of demonstrating against Cote de Romagne from the southwest. The advance all along the front was halted at 11 a. m., when the Armistice took effect.

The total advance of the division during the fighting November 1 to 11 was 4½ kilometers northward and 5 kilometers eastward. About 150 prisoners were taken and large quantities of war material. The total battle casualties of the 79th Division, including the two periods in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive and the period in the Troyon Defensive Sector, were killed in action 1,151, died of wounds 366, wounds not mortal 5,357, total 6,874.

On November 13, the 79th Division extended its line to the north, relieving the French 15th Colonial Division, and on November 18 and 20 to the south as far as Fresnes-en-Woevre. The division established examining posts along the armistice line and engaged in enforcement of the armistice terms, patrolling, cleaning up within its area, salvage, et cetera. On December 26, the division left the Verdun front for the Souilly (Meuse) area.

The 154th Field Artillery Brigade and the 304th Ammunition Train landed at Cherbourg and Le Havre August 4 to 8. Companies A, B and G of the ammunition train rejoined the division in the Prauthoy area. The artillery brigade and the main part of the ammunition train proceeded to training locations at Montmorillon and Lathus (Vienne), transferred on September 6 to the artillery training area at La Courtine (Creuse), where guns were received and training completed. The ammunition train rejoined the division November 3 on the Verdun front. The artillery brigade was under orders to the front when the Armistice intervened. On November 13, the brigade moved to the 9th (Chateauvillain, Haute Marne) Training Area, and on November 24 to the 4th (Rimaucourt, Haute Marne) Training Area, rejoining the division on January 11 in the Souilly area.

The division remained in the Souilly area until March 28, when transferred to the 4th (Rimaucourt, Haute Marne) Training Area. The movement to embarkation area began towards the end of April, the artillery brigade proceeding on April 19 to St. Nazaire and the bulk of the division on April 21 to the Nantes (Loire-Inferieure) area, thence on May 11 to St. Nazaire. The various units sailed from St. Nazaire May 13 to 19, landing at New York, Philadelphia, Newport News or Charleston, May 26 to June 11. The division was demobilized at Camp Dix, N. J., with the exception of the 313th Infantry, which was demobilized at Camp Meade June 5 to 10.

313TH INFANTRY

The 313th Infantry was organized at Camp Meade, Md., as part of the 157th Infantry Brigade. The initial step was the appointment of two officers of the Regular Army as colonel and lieutenant-colonel, respectively. The complement of officers was filled by the assignment of reserve officers from the training camp at Fort Niagara, N. Y. The officers reported on August 29, 1917. Late in September, the drafted men began to arrive from the western counties of Maryland and from Baltimore City. The Baltimore men predominated and the regiment became known as "Baltimore's Own". Like all of the units of the 79th Division, the 313th was repeatedly drawn upon for transfers to other camps, fresh contingents being received from time to time. In June, 1918, the regiment was filled up by large drafts, mostly from Camp Upton.

The 313th sailed from New York on July 8, 1918, arriving at Brest, France, on July 15. Leaving Brest on July 18 and stopping en route at Laignes (Cote d'Or), the regiment proceeded to the Prauthoy (Haute Marne) training area, being quartered by July 29 at Champlitte and vicinity. On September 8, the regiment moved to the Robert Espagne (Meuse) area, being located at Longeville, and on September 13 advanced to the Meuse-Argonne front.

During the night of September 13, the 313th Infantry relieved the 371st Infantry in the Avocourt Sector, with post command at Verrieres. The regiment's service in this defensive sector and its participation in the first phase of the Meuse-Argonne Offensive from September 26 to 30 have already been covered, as part of the 79th Division. The 313th Infantry was relieved by the 7th Infantry (3d Division) on September 30, withdrawing to Malancourt for the night and on October 1 moving to the rear in Bois d'Esnes. The casualties of the regiment in this operation were 45 officers and 1,050 enlisted men. About 300 prisoners were captured.

After a few days, the regiment proceeded via Genicourt and Rupt to the front in the Troyon Sector. On the night of October 7-8, the 313th Infantry relieved troops of the 26th Division in the line in the left half of the sector taken over by the 79th Division. The regimental post command, designated P. C. Marengo, was located in the vicinity of Bois de Combres. There was some enemy artillery fire and occasional raids in this sector. On October 24, the 313th Infantry was relieved by the 130th Infantry (33d Division). The regiment was assembled on October 26 at Rupt-en-Woevre, where replacements were received, and thence proceeded to Verdun.

On the night of October 30, the regiment marched up to Cote des Roches, and on the following night the first battalion relieved part of the 104th Infantry (26th Division) in Bois d'Ormont, with the third battalion in support in Bois de Brabant. Regimental post command was located near Ormont Ferme. On November 6, the first battalion was relieved by the third battalion, and during the night of November 7 the third battalion was relieved by a battalion of the 104th Infantry. The second battalion was attached to the 158th Brigade as reinforcement on November 5 and the first battalion on November 7. Both battalions were returned to the 157th Brigade on November 9. The participation of the 313th Infantry in the fighting from November 1 to 11 has already been covered, as part of the 79th Division.

At the Armistice, the first battalion was in the line southeast of Chaumont-devant-Damvillers. A few days later, the second battalion also entered the line, relieving a part of the 315th Infantry in front of Gibericy. These battalions were engaged for a brief period in post-armistice work, assisting returning prisoners of war, policing and salvage. They were shortly withdrawn from the line, however, and on November 20 the regiment moved to Verdun and vicinity.

On December 26, the regiment less the first battalion proceeded to the Souilly (Meuse) area, being located at Seigneulles and vicinity until January 17, when moved to Conde-en-Barrois. The first battalion remained in the Verdun sector until February 3, then rejoining the regiment. On March 28, the regiment was transferred to the 4th (Rimaucourt, Haute Marne) Training Area, being located at Lafauche. On April 21-25, the regiment moved to the Nantes (Loire-Inferieure) area, being located at Cholet (Marne-et-Loire) and vicinity, and on May 13-14 proceeded to the embarkation area at St. Nazaire. The regiment was divided on two ships, sailing May 16 and 18, respectively, and arriving at Newport News May 29 and June 1. The men from other states were discharged at Camp Stuart, but the bulk of the regiment comprising the Maryland men proceeded to Camp Meade, where they were discharged by June 10.

The 313th had the distinction of taking a leading part in the two outstanding achievements of the 79th Division—namely, the capture of the strongholds of Montfaucon and of La Borne de Cornouiller. The battle casualties of the regiment were 229 killed in action, 88 died of wounds, and 1,246 wounds not mortal. Nine members of the regiment won the Distinguished Service Cross.. The colors of the 313th Infantry were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

310TH MACHINE GUN BATTALION

The 310th Machine Gun Battalion was organized at Camp Meade, Md., as the divisional machine gun battalion. The first drafted men were received September 18-19, 1917. The battalion shared the common experience of the 79th Division in continual transfers of men to other camps and in receipt of new contingents. The battalion was originally a four-company, horse-drawn organization. On April 9, 1918, however, it was changed to a two-company, motorized organization, Company C being transferred to the 311th Machine Gun Battalion and Company D to the 312th Machine Gun Battalion. The battalion was equipped with Browning machine guns before departure overseas. The battalion strength at embarkation for overseas was 389, of whom 116 were Marylanders, although the majority were from Pennsylvania.

The battalion left Camp Meade on July 6, 1918, sailed from Hoboken on July 8, and arrived at Brest, France, on July 15. Leaving Brest on July 19, the battalion proceeded to the Prauthoy (Haute Marne) training area, being quartered first in Etrochey (Cote d'Or), but on July 29 moving to Boussenois (Cote d'Or).

On September 9, the battalion started for the Meuse-Argonne front, stopping en route for a few days at Robert-Espagne and arriving at Jouy-en-Argonne on September 15. On the night of September 16, the battalion marched to a more advanced station in Bois de Recicourt and three nights later moved to Bois de Bombasle, in divisional reserve. On September 26, the battalion was ordered forward in support of the advancing infantry. The battalion advanced well beyond the Montfaucon—Septsarges road, and two platoons were sent forward to positions north of Nantillois. The battalion was withdrawn on September 30-October 1 and reassembled in Bois de Bombasle, thence starting on October 2 towards the rear.

The battalion proceeded as far as Camp les Monthairons, arriving there on October 5, but was promptly ordered again to the front in the Troyon Sector. Leaving on October 6, the battalion traveled by trucks to Rupt-en-Woevre, thence marching all night to Longeau Ferme. On the evening of October 7, the battalion took over machine gun positions in Bois des Esparges from the 102d Machine Gun Battalion (26th Division). On October 17, the 310th was relieved by the 312th Machine Gun Battalion and moved to the rear at Woimbey, on October 24 proceeding to Rattentout, near Dieue-sur-Meuse.

On October 27, the battalion started again to the front, arriving on October 30 in Bois de Forges, beyond Verdun, and on the night of October 31 going forward to Cote des Roches, in divisional reserve. On November 5, the battalion went into action, advancing in support of the 316th Infantry to the slopes of Hill 378. The battalion withdrew on the night of November 6, expecting to go back to reserve, but next morning advanced again to about the same positions as before. On November 7 and 8, the battalion fired barrages to assist the advance of the infantry. The rapid advance on November 8, however, soon left the battalion far in the rear. On the morning of November 11, the battalion moved to Ormont Ferme under orders to support the 314th Infantry, but upon arrival of the armistice hour returned to its previous location in Bois de la Grande Montagne. On December 4, the battalion moved a few miles north to Ecurey.

Leaving this sector on December 27, the battalion proceeded to the Souilly (Meuse) area, being quartered first at Camp de Tamaris, but moving on January 5 to Camp les Monthairons. On March 28, the battalion moved to Liffol-le-Grand (Vosges) in the Rimaucourt (Haute Marne) area. On April 23, the battalion left for the Nantes (Loire Inferieure) area, where quartered at Bouguenais, and on May 13 proceeded to St. Nazaire. The battalion sailed on May 16, arrived at Hoboken on May 26, and was demobilized at Camp Dix, N. J., by June 2.

The battle casualties of the 310th Machine Gun Battalion were 5 killed in action, 3 died of wounds and 46 wounds not mortal. Four members of the battalion were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

The record of battalion commanders is as follows:

Major Andrew W. Smith.....	8/26/17
Major John L. Evans.....	9/1/18
Captain John M. Bonbright.....	11/5/18
Major Roderick S. Munford.....	12/5/18

311TH MACHINE GUN BATTALION

The 311th Machine Gun Battalion was organized at Camp Meade, Md., as part of the 157th Infantry Brigade. The first drafted men were received on September 19, 1917. During its period of training at Camp Meade, about 1,000 men were transferred from time to time to other camps, before the battalion was finally filled up in May-June, 1918. On April 9, 1918, the number of companies was increased from three to four by transfer of Company C, 310th Machine Gun Battalion, which became Company D, 311th Machine Gun Battalion. The battalion, an animal-drawn unit, was equipped with Browning machine guns before departure overseas. The battalion strength at embarkation for overseas was 772, of whom 176 were Marylanders, although the majority were from Pennsylvania.

The battalion left Camp Meade on July 6, 1918, sailed from Hoboken, N. J., on July 8, and arrived at Brest, France, on July 15. Leaving Brest on July 7, the battalion proceeded to the Prauthoy (Haute Marne) training area, being quartered for a few days in Buncey (Cote d'Or), but moving on July 30 to Occey (Haute Marne).

On September 9, the battalion started to the Meuse-Argonne front, arriving at Dombasle on September 14. Battalion headquarters were located in Bois de Recicourt. Companies were sent into the line in the Avocourt sector. In the attack starting on September 26, the battalion participated with its brigade, advancing in support of the infantry. The battalion casualties during this operation were 8 killed, 60 wounded and 10 missing. Upon being relieved on September 30, the battalion returned to its previous location in Bois de Recicourt.

On October 4, the battalion left for the Troyon sector. On the night of October 7, companies were sent into the line in the brigade sector. Battalion headquarters were located in Bois de Rivoli. Upon being relieved, the battalion was concentrated on October 25 at Rupt-en-Woevre.

On October 27, the battalion started again to the front, arriving on the night of October 29 in Bois de Borroux, beyond Verdun, and advancing on the following night to Cote des Roches. On the night of October 31, companies of the 311th relieved the 103d Machine Gun Battalion (26th Division) in the line. In the final attack starting November 9, the battalion participated with its brigade, advancing in support of the infantry. After the Armistice, battalion headquarters were located at Chaumont-devant-Damvillers, moving on November 27 to Romagne.

On December 26, the battalion proceeded to the Souilly (Meuse) area, being quartered at Longchamps-sur-Aire. On March 28, 1919, the battalion was transferred to the Rimaucourt (Haute Marne) area, being quartered for a few days at Brechainville (Vosges), but moving on April 5 to Villouxel (Vosges). The battalion left on April 23 for the Nantes (Loire-Inferieure) area, where quartered at Montfaucon-sur-Maine (Maine-et-Loire) and on May 11 proceeded to St. Nazaire. The battalion sailed on May 13, arrived at Newport News on 25, and proceeded to Camp Morrison nearby, whence distributed to various camps for demobilization. The Maryland men were sent to Camp Meade, but the largest contingent went to Camp Dix, N. J., where all were discharged by June 9.

The total battle casualties of the 311th Machine Gun Battalion were 3 killed in action, 3 died of wounds, 78 wounds not mortal. Five members of the battalion were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

The record of battalion commanders is as follows:

Captain Roy W. Delaplaine.....	9-/17
Major Charles M. DuPuy.....	12/12/17
Captain Robson D. Brown.....	10/14/18
Major Stephen G. Henry.....	11/26/18

312TH MACHINE GUN BATTALION

The 312th Machine Gun Battalion was organized at Camp Meade, Md., as part of the 158th Infantry Brigade. The first drafted men were received in September, 1917. The battalion shared the common experience of the 79th Division in continual transfers of men to other camps and in receipt of new contingents. On April 9, the number of companies was increased from three to four by transfer of Company D, 310th Machine Gun Battalion, which became Company D, 312th Machine Gun Battalion. The battalion, an animal-drawn unit, was equipped with Browning machine guns before departure overseas. The battalion strength at embarkation for overseas was approximately 750, of whom two-fifths were from Pennsylvania, over one-fourth from Maryland, and about one-sixth from the District of Columbia.

The battalion sailed from Hoboken, N. J., on July 9, 1918, and arrived at Brest, France, on July 19. Leaving Brest on July 22, the battalion proceeded to the Prauthoy (Haute Marne) training area, being quartered at Rivieres-les-Fosses, near Vaux-sous-Aubigny.

On September 9, the battalion started to the Meuse-Argonne front, arriving at Jouy-en-Argonne on September 13. Companies were sent into the line in the Avocourt sector. In the attack starting on September 26, the battalion participated with its brigade, advancing in support of the infantry. The battalion was relieved on October 1 and moved to the rear.

Arriving at Courouvre (Meuse) on October 5, the battalion advanced on October 15 to the front in the Troyon sector. Companies were sent into the line in the brigade sector. The battalion was relieved on October 24 and withdrew to Genicourt.

On October 26, the battalion started again to the front, arriving on the night of October 27 in Bois de Forges, beyond Verdun, and on the following night going forward into the line in Bois de la Grande Montagne. The battalion participated with its brigade in the attack on La Borne de Cornouiller and northward, and in the subsequent operations to the eastward.

When the fighting ended on November 11, the battalion reassembled at Etraye, moving next day to Reville. On December 27, the battalion proceeded to the Souilly (Meuse) area, being quartered at Rambluzin. On March 28, the battalion moved to Aillianville in the Rimaucourt (Haute Marne) area. The battalion proceeded on April 26 to the Nantes (Loire Inferieure) area, where quartered at Montaigu (Vendee), and on May 12 proceeded to St. Nazaire. The battalion sailed on May 14, arrived at New York on May 28, and was demobilized at Camp Dix, N. J., by June 7, 1919.

The total battle casualties of the 312th Machine Gun Battalion were 23 killed in action, 10 died of wounds, and 145 wounds not mortal. Two members of the battalion were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

The record of battalion commanders is as follows:

Major Edward L. Zane.....	8/26/17
Major Stuart S. Janney.....	1/8/18
Major Samuel J. Taylor.....	10/20/18

310TH FIELD ARTILLERY

The 310th Field Artillery was organized at Camp Meade, Md., as part of the 154th Field Artillery Brigade. The first contingents of drafted men were received on September 26, 1917, from the eastern shore and southern Maryland, followed by contingents also from Pennsylvania. In November, the regiment reached nearly full strength, but was subsequently depleted by transfers, so that by March, 1918, the strength was hardly over one-half. At the end of May, nearly 800 men were received from the new levies, but the majority were subsequently lost by transfer. The final filling up of the regiment occurred during the last two weeks at Camp Meade, by transfer of several hundred men from Camps Upton and Dix. The regimental strength at embarkation for overseas was approximately 1,550; of whom one-third were from Pennsylvania and somewhat over one-fifth from Maryland.

The regiment left Camp Meade on July 13 and sailed from Philadelphia on July 14 via Halifax, arriving at Liverpool, England, on July 31, and crossing to Cherbourg, France, on the night of August 7. On August 9, the regiment proceeded to Montmorillon (Vienne), moving on September 1 to the artillery training area at La Courtine (Creuse). French 75 millimeter guns were received on September 12 and other equipment during the following weeks, but only a small percentage of animals. The schedule of training was completed on October 17, and the regiment was ready for service at the front. The Armistice intervened, however, before orders arrived.

On November 13, the regiment moved to the 9th (Chateauvillain, Haute Marne) Training Area, being quartered at Laferte-sur-Aube and vicinity, and on November 24 to the 4th (Rimaucourt, Haute Marne) Training Area, where quartered at Roches-sur-Rognon and Bettaincourt. Here the regiment received practically its full quota of animals. On January 10, 1919, the regiment left to rejoin the division in the Souilly (Meuse) area, being quartered at Villotte-devant-St. Mihiel and vicinity. When the division moved to the 4th Training Area at the end of March, the regiment returned to its former station at Roches-sur-Rognon.

The regiment proceeded to St. Nazaire on April 19, sailed on May 13, arrived at Hoboken, N. J., on May 26, and was demobilized at Camp Dix by June 2. The regimental colors were subsequently presented to the State of Maryland.

The record of regimental and battalion commanders is as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS

The following divisional organization units also contained a considerable percentage of Marylanders, ranging from nearly one-fifth down to one-tenth—304th Sanitary Train, 304th Train Headquarters and Military Police, 79th Division Headquarters Troop, 304th Field Signal Battalion, 304th Supply Train, 304th Mobile Ordnance Repair Shop.

CHAPTER IX

OTHER UNITS OF THE U. S. ARMY COMPOSED LARGELY OF MARYLANDERS

117TH TRENCH MORTAR BATTERY

The 117th Trench Mortar Battery was part of the 67th Field Artillery Brigade, 42d Division. The 42d ("Rainbow") Division was organized in August, 1917, at Camp Mills, N. Y., comprising National Guard contingents from 26 States and the District of Columbia.

The 117th Trench Mortar Battery was organized on August 15, 1917, from the 3d Company and 86 men of the 4th Company, Coast Artillery, Maryland National Guard. The battery left Baltimore on August 26 for Camp Mills and sailed from Hoboken on October 19. The battery strength was 185 men, of whom 168 from Maryland. The battery landed at St. Nazaire, France, on October 31, and on November 11 moved to Fort de la Bonnelle, near Langres (Haute Marne), where training was received in trench artillery. On January 27, 1918, the battery rejoined the division in the 7th (Rolampont, Haute Marne) Training Area, being stationed at Neuilly l'Eveque. The battery was equipped with French 58 mm. guns, animal-drawn.

On February 16, the division moved to the Lorraine front, and elements entered the line on February 21, being affiliated with French divisions in the Luneville, St. Clement and Baccarat Sectors. Divisional headquarters were at Luneville (Meurthe-et-Moselle) during this period, and the division is officially credited with combat service in the Luneville Sector. The division was relieved on March 23 and prepared to return to the Rolampont area, but on March 28 was ordered back into the Baccarat Sector, relieving the French 128th Division on March 31 in the subsectors of Neufmaisons and Merviller. The division remained in this sector until June 21, when relieved by the 77th Division and the French 61st Division. The 117th Trench Mortar Battery was stationed at Xermamont from February 25 to March 21, taking up positions in the line on March 1 near Vellage Negre, about one mile from Badonviller, under French command. During this period, there was occasional firing during raids. On March 21, the battery started to the rear, but on April 1 advanced again to station at Pexonne, taking up its former positions near Vellage Negre and additional positions a few weeks later in Bois des Haies. The sector was under American command during this period. There was occasional firing during raids and especially from May 12 to 23 harassing fire on the enemy lines to break up projector gas attacks. The battery was relieved from this sector on June 16.

After a few days' rest, the division proceeded to the Champagne front, near Chalons, and on July 5 elements entered the Esperance-Souain Sector near Sommepey in the intermediate position in affiliation with the French 13th and 170th Divisions. Upon the German offensive of July 15, the troops were withdrawn from the first line of resistance to the intermediate position, where the German assault was repulsed. The 117th Trench Mortar Battery was stationed at Camp Marchand July 7 to 15 and at Bussy-le-Chateau July 15 to 18. The battery, from positions in the intermediate line northeast of Suippes, took an important part on July 15, for three hours pouring a destructive fire upon a cross-road on the far side of a steep hill, where the enemy forces were re-forming after the initial advance. The first waves of the enemy attack were passing the battery's positions before the counter-attack was launched by the infantry, and the battle waged furiously for over 36 hours. On July 18, the battery participated in the preliminary bombardment for the Franco-American counter-offensive. The division was withdrawn from this front on July 19.

The division moved to the Chateau-Thierry front and participated in the Aisne-Marne Offensive, capturing La Croix Rouge Ferme, forcing a crossing of the Ourcq River and pursuing the enemy to the Vesle River. During these operations, the advance of the infantry was so rapid that there was no opportunity for the 117th Trench Mortar Battery to function as an artillery unit. The members of the battery, however, volunteered for duty at field hospitals and first aid stations. The division was relieved on August 3 by the 4th Division, but the artillery brigade supported the 4th Division in the Aisne-Marne Offensive to August 6 and in the Vesle Sector to August 11.

The division moved to the rear and from August 16 to 28 was located in the 3d (Bourmont, Haute Marne) Training Area. On August 28, the division moved to the 2d (Neufchateau, Vosges) Training Area, and on September 4 started towards the St. Mihiel front, arriving in Bois de la Reine on September 7. On September 11, the division relieved the 89th Division on a portion of the line between Seicheprey and Flirey and participated in the St. Mihiel Offensive September 12 to 16. The division remained in the line in the Essey-Pannes Sector until October 1, when relieved by the 89th Division extending its line. The 117th Trench Mortar Battery was stationed at Mandres from September 13 to 19, and at Camp McCormick from September 19 to 30. During the St. Mihiel operation, the members of the battery worked on an advanced ammunition dump. On September 24, the battery began to put guns in position for defense when the line was consolidated in this sector.

The division moved to the rear in the vicinity of Souilly (Meuse), thence proceeding to the Meuse-Argonne front. On October 12, the division relieved the 1st Division in the line north of Exermont. On October 14-16, the division attacked towards Landres-et-St. Georges, capturing Hill 288, Hill 242, Tuilerie Ferme and the Cote de Chatillon. The division remained in the line consolidating its positions until October 31, when relieved by the 2d Division. The division passed into reserve, but on November 5 again entered the line, relieving the 78th Division between Sy and Tannay, and pursued the retreating enemy to the Meuse River near Sedan. On November 10, the division was relieved by the 77th Division.

The 117th Trench Mortar Battery was stationed at Cheppy from October 13 to November 2. During the period in the Meuse-Argonne, the men were used largely as couriers and military police. With five borrowed 6-inch Newton mortars, the battery began on October 25 to put guns in position north of Sommerance, and on November 1 in support of the 2d Division participated in the preliminary bombardment preceding the infantry advance, pouring a destructive fire on machine gun nests on the slopes around Landres-et-St. George and the town itself. The battery thereupon withdrew, having suffered severely from enemy fire while engaged in placing its guns and especially from gas on November 1. The battery followed the advance of its division November 5 to 10. At the Armistice, nearly one-half of the men were in the hospital and the effective strength was reduced to 97.

On November 20, the division started its march into Germany as part of the Army of Occupation, on December 4 taking station at Ahrweiler. The 117th Trench Mortar Battery, re-equipped with Newton-Stokes mortars and motorized, proceeded with the division, stopping for two weeks in Arlon, Belgium, on special duty and reaching its permanent station at Kreuzberg, Germany, on December 15. The battery left the division on January 9 for port of embarkation, arrived at Torfou on January 13 and remained there until April 2 on account of the congestion of troops at St. Nazaire, sailed from St. Nazaire on April 9. The battery landed at New York and was held for a few days at Camp Merritt, then forwarded to Camp Meade where demobilized early in May.

During the American Army offensives, very little use was made of trench mortars. The 117th Trench Mortar Battery was exceptional in respect to length of service in the line, and in the amount of actual firing. Its battle casualties were 4 killed in action, 2 died of wounds, and 34 wounds not mortal. The colors of the battery were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

The record of battery commanders is as follows:

Captain Robert J. Gill.....	8/18/17
1st Lt.—Captain Richard E. Carson.....	8/8/18
1st Lt. J. Woodall Greene.....	10/17/18
Captain Lee V. McCabe.....	11/12/18
1st Lt.—Captain J. Woodall Greene.....	3/23/19

58TH ARTILLERY, C. A. C.

The organization of the 58th Regiment of Coast Artillery was started in December, 1917, although the official regimental birth date is January 30, 1918. Headquarters company, supply company, first and second battalions were organized in the Coast Defenses of Eastern New York from the regular troops on duty there and from coast artillery companies of the New York National Guard.

The third battalion was organized at Fort Howard in the Coast Defenses of Baltimore. Battery E was formed from the regular troops on duty there, with additions of drafted men. At date of embarkation for overseas, approximately one-tenth were Marylanders. Battery F was formed from the Maryland National Guard, absorbing the 4th Company of Coast Artillery and drawing upon the 1st and 2d Companies for 75 men each. The 4th Company had been recruited again to full strength after losing all but 35 men in the formation of the 117th Trench Mortar Battery. The contingents from the 1st and 2d companies, which were guarding the docks at Canton and Locust Point, did not report at Fort Howard until the latter part of March, 1918. The battery strength at date of embarkation was 247, nearly all Marylanders.

The regiment, less the third battalion, sailed from Hoboken on May 10, landed at Brest, and proceeded to the American artillery organization and training center in the vicinity of Limoges (Haute Vienne). Regimental headquarters were located at St. Leonard. The third battalion sailed from Hoboken on May 22, landed at Brest, and proceeded to Ambazac in the Limoges training area. The battalions were organized as semi-independent units. The regiment was assigned to the 32d Artillery Brigade, together with the 59th and 65th Regiments of Coast Artillery. In June, the regiment received part of its equipment, consisting of 8-inch howitzers, tractor-drawn.

On or about August 12, the regiment moved to the great French artillery camp at La Courtine (Creuse), for practice in actual firing. During the first week in September, the regiment moved to a billeting area along the Marne River, north of Chaumont. Regimental headquarters were located at Vignory (Haute Marne), and the third battalion was quartered at Villiers-sur-Marne. The 32d Artillery Brigade was in reserve to army artillery of the American Army. In September, the equipment of the regiment was completed, consisting of four guns per battery.

From October 22 to 25, the several battalions of the regiment started for the front in the American Second Army area, proceeding to Toul and thence advancing to the front. The first and second battalions were assigned to corps artillery of the Fourth Corps, and took up gun positions north of Regnieville (Meurthe-et-Moselle). Regimental headquarters and the third battalion were assigned to corps artillery of the Sixth Corps. The third battalion, together with the third battalion of the 65th Artillery, C. A. C., formed an artillery group under the 58th's commander, with headquarters at Rosieres-en-Haye (Meurthe-et-Moselle). The third battalion of the 58th moved to Montauville on the night of October 30, and on November 1 took up gun positions in Bois-le-Prete, about 1½ kilometers north of Montauville. From November 1 to 8, the men were occupied in emplacing the guns. Firing started at midnight on November 9 and continued until 11 a. m. on November 11, when the Armistice became effective. The major part of the firing was upon enemy artillery positions and rear area, but participating also in the barrages preceding the infantry attacks on November 10 and 11. The battalion fired a total of 396 shots.

The regiment started to the rear on November 21, and two weeks later arrived in the 18th Artillery Area, northwest of Chaumont. Regimental headquarters were located at Charmes-la-Grande (Haute Marne), third battalion headquarters and Battery E at Ambonville and Battery F at Lescheres. The third battalion later moved to Rouvroy, near Donjeux. A regimental parade on December 16 marked the first union of the entire regiment in one formation. The regiment turned in its armament early in December, and worked in loading for shipment the guns and tractors of eight other regiments. During the period in this area, many men were lost by transfer to the Postal Express Service, Quartermaster Corps, et cetera.

On January 24, the regiment, less the third battalion, left for Base Section No. 2, at the port of Bordeaux, the third battalion following about a week later. After some moving about, the regiment was established in Poudrerie Barracks, near Bas-sens, close to the docks at Bordeaux. While waiting, the regiment was assigned to dock work. Late in March, the regiment moved to the embarkation camp and sailed on April 16, arriving at New York on April 27 and proceeding to Camp Upton. Detachments were sent to various camps convenient to the men's homes for demobilization. A detachment, comprising practically all of Battery F and 23 Marylanders of Headquarters Company and Battery E, under command of 1st Lt. Henry F. Baker, Jr., was sent to Camp Meade, Md., and demobilized there on May 13, 1919.

Batteries E and F were highly commended for their excellent work during their short period at the front. These batteries sustained no battle casualties.

The regimental commanders were Colonel Alston Hamilton to October 24, 1918, Lt. Col. Thomas A. Terry to November 5, 1918, and Colonel William T. Carpenter to demobilization. The commanders of the third battalion were Major Alfred M. Mason to April 25, 1918, Major—Lt. Col. Thomas A. Terry to October 28, 1918, Captain Willard M. Hall to November 4, 1918, Major Ferdinand C. Gallagher to December 5, 1918, Captain Alfred R. Heath to December 21, 1918, Major Franklin Kemble to January 21, 1919, and Major Henry C. Wilson to demobilization. Battery F was commanded by Captain Rudolph Ritterbusch to June 24, 1918, Captain John C. Hawkins to October 29, 1918, Captain Wilton B. Persons to February 2, 1919, and 1st Lt. Winfield S. Jewell, Jr., to demobilization.

520TH AMBULANCE SECTION

The U. S. Army Ambulance Service was authorized by War Department order dated June 23, 1917, for service with the French Army. Recruiting was already under way before the date of the War Department order. Section No. 520 was enrolled at Johns Hopkins University, being composed mostly of Hopkins students, and proceeded on June 8, 1917, to Camp Crane, the ambulance service training camp, at Allentown, Pa.

It was expected that the ambulance sections would be sent quickly to France. Delays were encountered, however, so that a year or more elapsed before all had departed. On June 13, 1918, thirty ambulance sections, including Section No. 520, sailed from New York for Genoa, Italy, for service with the Italian Army. In the meantime, the personnel had changed considerably, so that at embarkation for overseas the number of Marylanders in Section No. 520 was only 12, of total strength 43. The units were equipped each with 12 motor ambulances.

At the end of August, fifteen units were called from Italy to assist the American Army in France. The personnel of these units was reduced to 32, in order to form several additional units to remain in Italy. Section No. 520 left Genoa August 30 and proceeded overland, reporting on September 12 to headquarters of the American First Corps at Liverdun, France, for service in the St. Mihiel operation. The unit was placed under the control of the corps sanitary train. Section No. 520 evacuated the triage of the 2d Division at Noviant-aux-Pres, advanced on September 13 to Thiaucourt, until the division was relieved on September 16. The triage was a field hospital or sorting station, where the wounded were received from the first aid and advanced dressing stations and transported to the evacuation hospitals.

The First Corps headquarters moved to Rarecourt for the Meuse-Argonne operation, which opened on September 26. Section 520 served as follows, moving forward with the general advance: triage of 35th Division at Neuville, advanced on September 28 to Cheppy; triage of 28th Division at Cheppy October 2 to 8; triage of 82d Division at Varennes from October 11, advanced on October 12 to Apremont; triage of 80th Division at Baulny from October 31, advanced on November 3 to Imecourt, again advanced on November 6 to Buzancy; triage of 77th Division at Thenorgues from November 10 to 13. The unit worked mostly from the triages to the evacuation hospitals, but on some occasions also in front of the triages. The men were subjected to shell-fire, especially while working between a dressing station at Charpentry and the triage at Cheppy, and between a dressing station at Chatel Chehery and the triage at Apremont. No battle casualties were sustained.

After the Armistice, the unit was stationed at various places. It left Joinville (Haute Marne) March 18, 1919, sailed from Brest, France, April 12, 1919, arrived at Hoboken April 23, and promptly demobilized at Camp Dix, N. J. A contingent including the Marylanders was forwarded to Camp Meade for discharge. The commanding officer during the major period, from March 6, 1918, to March 15, 1919, was 1st Lt. James Boyd.

403D TELEGRAPH BATTALION

In the spring of 1917, the Bell Telephone system promoted the organization of units in the Signal Reserve Corps, U. S. Army. The 4th Reserve Signal Battalion comprised Company D, made up of personnel from the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, drawn mostly from Baltimore and Washington, and Company E, made up of personnel from the New York Telephone Company, drawn from up-state New York. Company D was sworn in early in May, 1917. The battalion, redesignated as 403d Signal Battalion, was mobilized October 16, 1917, at Camp Sherman, Ohio. The total strength of Company D at embarkation for overseas was 101, of whom 37 were Marylanders.

The battalion sailed from New York, June 10, 1918, and arrived at Brest, France, June 19. The battalion was employed in the construction and repair of wire communication lines in rear areas, all work being performed with diligence and dispatch. The stations of Company D were as follows: from June 24 to July 19 at Palaiseau, a suburb of Paris; from July 20 to September 2 at Bar-sur-Aube (Aube); from September 2 to 30 at Gudmont (Haute Marne); from September 30 to October 23 at Ville-sur-Saulx (Meuse); from October 23 to November 19 at Belrain (Meuse); from November 19 to 28 at Belrupt, in the vicinity of Verdun; from November 28 to February 24 at Briey (Meurthe-et-Moselle); from February 24 to June 7 at Freville (Vosges). While stationed at Briey, the company maintained and operated lines at a number of points within the former battle area, and also performed construction work in splicing through to connect up with the German lines, for serving the American Army of Occupation.

The battalion sailed from St. Nazaire, June 17, 1919, arrived at New York June 28, and demobilized July 1, 1919, at Camp Mills. A contingent including the Marylanders was forwarded to Camp Meade for discharge.

The battalion commanders were Captain—Major Alexander E. Whitworth to August 7, 1918, and Captain—Major William C. Barbour to June 15, 1919. Company D was commanded by Captain John T. Graff to April 30, 1918, Captain Walter E. Ballard to March 8, 1919, and 1st Lt. James C. Pruitt to June 15, 1919. Captain Walter E. Ballard was in command of the battalion and of Company D upon return to the United States.

BASE HOSPITAL No. 18

As part of the preparedness movement, the American Red Cross in 1916 sponsored the organization of military hospital units at leading hospitals throughout the country. These units were organized in accordance with War Department plans, and the personnel enrolled in the Army Reserve. When called into active service, they became an integral part of the U. S. Army.

Base Hospital No. 18 was organized in November, 1916, at the Johns Hopkins Hospital. The equipment was provided through the cooperation of the Baltimore Red Cross Chapter. In May, 1917, Base Hospital No. 18 was selected to form part of the first expeditionary force of the U. S. Army to France. The personnel and equipment were rapidly completed, designed for a hospital of 500 beds in accordance with the tables of organization then in effect. A regular army medical officer was assigned to military command of the unit. The strength at embarkation for overseas was 27 officers, 65 nurses, and 153 enlisted men.

The unit was mobilized May 24, 1917, sailed from New York June 13, landed at St. Nazaire, France, June 28, and proceeded a few days later to Savenay (Loire-Inferieure). On July 5, part of the unit was detached and sent back to St. Nazaire to operate a hospital, which at first was known as U. S. Army Hospital No. 1, later redesignated as Base Hospital No. 101. The personnel from Base Hospital No. 18 were relieved and returned to their own unit at the end of August. The designation of Base Hospital No. 18 was changed on August 6 to U. S. Army Hospital No. 2, but on October 2 changed back to Base Hospital No. 18.

The unit proceeded from Savenay to Bazoilles-sur-Meuse (Vosges), in the advance section, where it arrived July 26. At Bazoilles, it took over from the French a military hospital, located on an attractive estate. In addition to the permanent buildings on the estate, the hospital included a number of barrack-type wooden buildings—total estimated capacity 1,000 beds, later increased by tent expansion to 1,300 beds.

Under the later tables of organization, the contemplated capacity of a base hospital had been raised to 1,000 beds, but the personnel of Base Hospital No. 18 was not correspondingly increased. On February 8, 1918, Hospital Unit A, formed at the Presbyterian Hospital, Philadelphia, Pa., joined Base Hospital No. 18 at Bazoilles, bringing a permanent increment of 45 enlisted men, although the officers were transferred elsewhere. The original enlisted personnel included 32 students of the Johns Hopkins Medical School, who were assured graduation upon completion of stipulated training in France. These men were awarded their medical degrees in April, 1918, and were thereupon sent for a brief course in military medicine to the Army school at Langres, upon completion of which they were commissioned. There were many changes in the personnel of Base Hospital No. 18 all during its service in France.

Base Hospital No. 18 functioned at first as a camp hospital for the several divisions of the U. S. Army in training areas nearby. When the American troops entered the trenches, at first in defensive sectors, the hospital began to receive battle casualties, but comparatively few in number during the winter and spring of 1918. In June, 1918, however, as American divisions engaged in more active operations, the stream of wounded increased rapidly and soon taxed the hospital's resources. Moreover, several small groups were sent out for temporary duty at evacuation hospitals in the battle zone—namely, Surgical Team No. 11 from June 3 to August 8, Surgical Team No. 11 from July 4 to August 23, and Shock Team No. 114 from July 23 to September 23. At the periods of greatest influx of wounded, in September and October, the evacuation hospitals were overloaded and were unable to perform even the first operations in a large percentage of cases. Base Hospital No. 18, as one of the most advanced base hospitals, received a goodly proportion of these cases, thus functioning to a large extent as an evacuation hospital. The personnel rendered devoted and unrelenting service during this trying period.

Base Hospital No. 18 functioned independently until July 1, 1918, when it became a part of a large and important hospital center established at Bazoilles. Base Hospital No. 18 was designated as a special hospital for chest and abdominal surgical cases, and received all contagious disease cases coming to the center. It also operated an optical and ophthalmological department. During its active service, August 1, 1917, to January 9, 1919, the hospital treated a total of 14,179 medical and surgical cases.

After the Armistice, the patients were forwarded as rapidly as possible towards the ports of embarkation. On January 9, 1919, Base Hospital No. 18 turned over its remaining patients and property to Provisional Hospital No. 1. The main body sailed from St. Nazaire February 1, arrived at New York February 14, demobilized at Camp Upton February 25. The nurses were detached from the unit at St. Nazaire, sailed a few days later and arrived at New York February 27.

Base Hospital No. 42 was organized in June, 1917, at the University of Maryland, in Baltimore, and on April 1, 1918, was mobilized at Camp Meade, where trained and equipped. Funds were raised by public subscription for the benefit of the unit. The nurses, drawn from the University Hospital and other hospitals in Baltimore, were called into service during the spring of 1918 and assigned to various cantonments for duty and training. The nurses were mobilized in New York City at the end of May. Under the later tables of organization, the base hospital unit was designed for a normal capacity of 1,000 beds. The strength at embarkation for overseas was 34 officers, 102 nurses, and 200 enlisted men.

The unit from Camp Meade sailed from New York June 28, landed in England, and crossed to Cherbourg, France, on the night of July 11-12. The unit proceeded to Bazoilles-sur-Meuse (Vosges), in the advance section, arriving there on July 15, 1918. The nurses sailed from New York July 14, landed in England, and crossed to Le Havre, France, on the night of July 29-30. The nurses arrived at Bazoilles on August 1.

Base Hospital No. 42 was the fifth hospital unit to arrive at Bazoilles, where a large and important hospital center was established. The organization occupied one type "A" unit, which was nearly completed, of normal capacity 1,000 beds, but with emergency tent expansion to 2,000 beds. This unit was designated as a special hospital for maxillofacial cases.

The hospital began receiving patients on July 19. The heaviest period was in September and October, during the height of the operations of the American Army. The stream of wounded reached such volume that the hospital was obliged to function to a large extent as an evacuation hospital, passing the patients farther to the rear as rapidly as possible. A large percentage of the cases had received nothing but first aid treatment, the evacuation hospitals at the front being unable to handle them. In October, the number of patients in the hospital ranged from 1,200 to 1,800. During its period of activity, July 19, 1918, to January 8, 1919, the hospital treated 2,593 surgical and 4,559 medical cases.

During the busy period, the personnel was seriously depleted by assignments to duty elsewhere. On July 19, 1918, two small teams were sent to American Red Cross Hospital No. 2, at Paris, some of the personnel returning to their own station in August, and the rest being assigned as Operating Team No. 550 on duty with evacuation hospitals at the front to November 25. The following teams also served at hospitals within the battle zone—Surgical Team No. 100 from July 19 to November 18, and Surgical Team No. 101 from July 19 to September 15. There were, also, various other instances of detached service by medical officers of the unit. Many nurses, also, were detached for temporary duty—10 at Base Hospital No. 18 from August 3 to the first of October, 22 at American Red Cross Military Hospital No. 5 at Paris from August 4 to December 18, and 8 with evacuation hospitals at the front from August 4 to November 15.

Base Hospital No. 42 was relieved January 8, 1919, by Evacuation Hospital No. 21. Much of the personnel was detached from time to time. Over a third of the nurses signed for further service in the A. E. F. and remained with Evacuation Hospital No. 21. The unit left Bazoilles on January 28, proceeding to Cugand (Vendee). The nurses went direct to St. Nazaire, moving a few days later to Brest. They sailed March 1 and arrived March 9 at New York, where demobilized. Most of the officers left Cugand on March 23 for Brest, sailing from there in April. The main unit proceeded April 2 to St. Nazaire and sailed April 8, the personnel then comprising 2 officers and 145 enlisted men. The unit arrived at New York April 20 and was sent to Camp Merritt, N. J. The main body, composed of Marylanders, proceeded a few days later to Camp Meade, where demobilized May 2, 1919.

The record of commanding officers is as follows:

Lt. Col. Howard H. Johnson.....	4/1/18
Major Cary B. Gamble.....	8/2/18
Major—Lt. Col. Archibald C. Harrison.....	8/20/18

372D INFANTRY

The 93d Division (Provisional) was never completed, but for administrative purposes comprised the 185th and 186th Infantry Brigades, composed of the colored 369th, 370th, 371st and 372d Infantry Regiments. Upon arrival in France, the several regiments were affiliated with the French, and the divisional organization ceased to function.

The 372d Infantry was organized at Camp Stuart, Va., on January 1, 1918, from colored National Guard units of Connecticut, District of Columbia, Maryland, Massachusetts, Ohio and Tennessee. The 1st Separate Company Infantry, Maryland National Guard, became Company I, 372d Infantry. The regiment sailed from Newport News on March 30, arriving at St. Nazaire, France, on April 14.

The regiment proceeded on April 21 to Conde-en-Barrois (Meuse), in training area of the French Thirteenth Corps, where it was reorganized to conform to the French tables of organization, Company I remaining a rifle company of the third battalion. On May 26, the regiment joined the French 63d Division at the Argonne front in the Aire Sector, between the Aire River and Le Four de Paris. The regiment began to move into the line on June 4, and on June 7 assumed command of the Argonne-Ouest Subsector, passing on June 21 to the control of the French 35th Division. June 27-July 1, the regiment was transferred to a Vauquois Subsector, assuming command on July 1. On July 2, the regiment became an organic part of the French 157th Division, known as the "Red Hand" Division. This division was relieved on July 14 from the Aire Sector, and on July 16 moved into the Verdun Sector. On July 26, the 372d Infantry assumed command of Subsector 304, between Haucourt and Bethincourt, being relieved on September 9. The division withdrew from this front a few days later, moving to the rear and shortly proceeding to the Champagne front.

The French 157th Division was now assigned to the French Ninth Corps, French Fourth Army. The French Fourth Army attacked on September 26 west of the Argonne Forest, in conjunction with the attack of the American First Army between the Argonne Forest and the Meuse River. In the initial attack, the division was in corps reserve, but on September 28 entered to the left of the French 161st Division, placing the 372d Infantry and the 371st Infantry in line from right to left, in position north of the Rouvroy—Ripont road.

The 372d Infantry, with third battalion in assault and first battalion in support, attacked on September 28 against the strong enemy position on Crete-des-Observatoires, capturing the western part of this ridge and reaching a position south of Bussy Ferme. On September 29, the 372d Infantry, with first battalion in assault and third battalion in support, attacked Sechault, but retired and reorganized south of Bussy Ferme. Elements of the 372d Infantry participated with the 369th Infantry in the capture of Sechault. Heavy losses were suffered in the two days' severe fighting. Company I, in the front line on the first day, lost all of its officers as casualties.

The attack progressed northward toward Monthois. On September 30, the 371st Infantry captured Trieres Ferme, 2 kilometers south of Monthois. The 372d Infantry relieved the 371st Infantry on October 1, and on October 2 reached a line across the Sechault—Monthois road $\frac{3}{4}$ kilometer south of Monthois. The third battalion was in reserve during this time. On the night of October 7-8, the French 157th Division was relieved.

The French 157th Division was now transferred to the Alsace front, and on October 13 moved into the Anould Sector, extending from Tete-des-Faux to Frapelle. The 372d Infantry occupied Subsector B, near Wisembach. On November 17, the division withdrew to the Bruyeres (Vosges) area, the 372d Infantry being billeted in the vicinity of Granges. The regiment was released from the French 157th Division December 12, proceeded to the Le Mans (Sarthe) embarkation center January 1-2, moved to Brest January 9, sailed February 3, arrived at Hoboken February 11. Detachments were sent to various camps for discharge, the Marylanders being consigned to Camp Meade. The regiment was officially demobilized at Camp Sherman, Ohio, March 6, 1919.

The total battle casualties of the 372d Infantry were 93 killed in action, 28 died of wounds, and 568 wounds not mortal. The regiment was awarded the decoration of the French Croix de Guerre with Palm, with the following citation: "Under the leadership of Colonel Tupes, this regiment, with a superb spirit and an admirable scorn of danger, dashed to the assault of a position resolutely defended by the enemy. It captured it by main force, under an exceptionally violent machine gun fire. It then continued its advance in spite of the enemy artillery fire and its cruel inflictions, capturing numerous prisoners, cannons, machine guns, and important material." There were, also, many individual awards of the Croix de Guerre. Fifteen members of the regiment were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

Colonel Glendie B. Young (white) commanded the regiment to July 12, 1918, and Colonel Herchel Tupes (white) from that date until just prior to embarkation for return to the United States. Major Samuel M. Johnson (white) commanded the third battalion. Commanding Company I overseas were, successively, Captain James E. Dunjill (colored), Captain Charles P. Rowe (white), who was mortally wounded September 28, 1918, and 1st Lt. Frederick Decker (white).

351ST FIELD ARTILLERY

The 92d Division was organized, dating from October 29, 1917, with division headquarters at Camp Funston, Kans. The component units were organized at various northern camps, being composed of colored selective service men from the United States at large. General and field officers, and officers in the technical branches and in the field artillery above the grade of first lieutenant, were to be white. Headquarters 167th Field Artillery Brigade, and the 349th and 350th Field Artillery Regiments, were organized at Camp Dix, N. J. The 351st Field Artillery, however, was organized at Camp Meade, Md., as also the 368th Infantry. The Maryland colored draftees were assigned to the 351st Artillery, although there was a small percentage of Maryland men also in the 368th Infantry. The total strength of the 351st Field Artillery at embarkation for overseas was approximately 1,600, of whom 601 were Marylanders.

The regiment sailed from Hoboken June 19, 1918, and arrived at Brest, France, June 26. On July 3, the field artillery brigade, detached from the division, proceeded to Montmorillon (Vienne). The 351st Field Artillery was stationed at Lathus and vicinity. On August 13, the brigade moved to the artillery training area at La Courtine (Creuse). The 351st Field Artillery now received one battery (4 guns) of 155 mm. howitzers, but the remaining five batteries were not received until after completion of training. The brigade completed its training schedule on September 20 and awaited orders for the front. The 349th and 350th Field Artillery Regiments rejoined the division at the Lorraine front in the Marbache Sector on October 20. The 351st Field Artillery, having finally received its tractor equipment, rejoined the division at the front on October 30. The 167th Field Artillery Brigade relieved the 62d Field Artillery Brigade (37th Division) in support of the 92d Division.

The 92d Division, less artillery brigade, served in the St. Die Defensive Sector, August 23-September 20, and in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, September 26-October 3. From October 9 to November 11, the division occupied the Marbache Defensive Sector on a front of 14 kilometers, extending from the east bank of the Moselle north of Pont-a-Mousson to Port-sur-Seille, the eastern limit of the American zone. On November 10-11, the division participated in the attack of the American Second Army, occupying Bois Cheminot, Bois de la Voiryotte and Bois Frehaut. The artillery brigade engaged in active firing from November 3, covering infantry raids and laying destructive fire on special points within the enemy lines, and especially supported the attack of November 10-11.

On November 14, the French Tenth Army relieved the units of the 92d Division east of the Moselle, and the division then assembled west of the river in the vicinity of Pont-a-Mousson. The division moved during the latter part of December to the Le Mans (Sarthe) embarkation center, where the 351st Field Artillery was stationed at Couterne (Orne). The regiment sailed from Brest February 6, arrived at Hoboken February 16, held at Camp Mills for about ten days, demobilized at Camp Meade by March 7. Division headquarters and field artillery brigade headquarters were demobilized at Camp Meade.

The battle casualties of the 351st Field Artillery were 4 wounds not mortal. The colors of the regiment were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

808TH PIONEER INFANTRY

The 808th Infantry was organized July 10, 1918, at Camp Meade, Md., composed of colored enlisted personnel, with white officers. Orders were received on July 30, changing the regiment to pioneer infantry. The enlisted personnel consisted almost entirely of drafted men who had been in camp only two or three weeks before assignment to the regiment. The initial strength was about 1,000. In addition to the regular regimental duties, the regimental headquarters had supervision of the training and equipping of the August Automatic Replacement Draft (colored), which left Camp Meade on August 24. The regiment itself was filled up just prior to leaving Camp Meade. The total strength at embarkation for overseas was 3,201, of whom approximately 500 were Marylanders.

The regiment left Camp Meade August 28, sailed from Hoboken August 31, and arrived at Brest, France, September 7. After a week's stay in the vicinity of Brest, the regiment proceeded to the 20th Training Area, arriving on September 18 at Foulain (Haute Marne) and locating at the nearby village of Luzy.

On September 20, the regiment left for Dombasle-en-Argonne, in the zone of operations of the American First Army west of the Meuse. The main assignment was from October 10 in charge of engineer dumps of the First Army, including the Army engineer park at Souhesme-la-Grande and the First, Fifth and Third Corps parks at Les Islettes, Aubreville and Dombasle, respectively. The work consisted of loading and unloading material. The dumps were operated until finally turned over to the American Red Cross in March, 1919. Units of the regiment also performed numerous other tasks at various places, including salvage, road work, quarrying, et cetera. The first battalion was on detached service from September 19 to October 30 at Sorcy (Meuse) under the Chief Salvage Officer, First Army. The second battalion was on detached service from March 14 to April 25, 1919, at Longuyon (Meurthe-et-Moselle) under the War Materials Board, engaged in loading German material turned over under the conditions of the Armistice.

The regiment left on April 25 for Brest, where put to work while awaiting transportation to the United States. The regiment sailed June 12, 1919, landed at Newport News June 22, demobilized at Camp Lee, Va., June 27, 1919. A large contingent including the Marylanders was sent to Camp Meade for discharge.

The regiment in general is credited with service in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, September 26-November 11, 1918. Battle casualties were 1 died of wounds and 4 wounds not mortal. The colors of the regiment were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

811TH PIONEER INFANTRY

The 811th Pioneer Infantry was organized in August, 1918, at Camp Dix, N. J., composed of colored enlisted personnel, with white officers. The enlisted personnel consisted almost entirely of newly-drafted men. The first contingent reported September 5, 1918, and at subsequent dates additional contingents from Camps Lee, Meade and Upton. The total strength at embarkation for overseas was approximately 3,000, of whom 860 were Marylanders.

The regiment sailed from Hoboken October 20, landed in England, thence crossing to Le Havre, France, November 4. The various units were assigned to duty at the docks and depots in Nantes, Bordeaux, Marseilles, Paris, La Palice and St. Nazaire. The regiment sailed from France by segments in June and July, 1919, landing at New York or Norfolk, and demobilized at Camps Upton, Mills, Dix and Lee. The Maryland men were forwarded to Camp Meade for discharge. The last company was demobilized August 3, 1919. The colors of the regiment were presented after the war to the State of Maryland.

11TH DIVISION

The 11th ("Lafayette") Division was organized in August, 1918, at Camp Meade, Md. The component units, apart from the artillery brigade, were as follows:

Headquarters Troop

21st Infantry Brigade:

17th and 71st Infantry Regiments

32d Machine Gun Battalion
 22d Infantry Brigade:
 63d and 72d Infantry Regiments
 33d Machine Gun Battalion
 31st Machine Gun Battalion
 211th Engineer Regiment and Train
 211th Field Signal Battalion
 11th Train Headquarters and Military Police
 11th Ammunition Train
 11th Sanitary Train
 11th Supply Train

The original divisional artillery was also organized at Camp Meade—namely, the 11th Field Artillery Brigade, comprising the 31st, 32d and 33d Field Artillery Regiments and the 11th Trench Mortar Battery. On October 9, however, this brigade was changed to corps artillery, and the 24th Artillery Brigade was assigned to the 11th Division. The 24th Field Artillery Brigade, comprising the 70th, 71st and 72d Field Artillery Regiments and the 24th Trench Mortar Battery, was organized and trained at Camp Knox, Ky.

The 17th and 63d Infantry Regiments were Regular Army units, at about one-half war strength when assigned to the 11th Division. The 17th Infantry, upon arrival at Camp Meade, furnished about 600 men for the 71st Infantry. The 63d Infantry, before transfer to Camp Meade, was brought up to full strength by drafted men from the far western States. At Camp Meade, about 600 men were furnished for the 72d Infantry. Other units of the 11th Division also received a nucleus of trained men from the two Regular Army regiments or from various sources. The division, however, was filled up mainly by drafted men. The allotments of drafted men to Camp Meade during this period were from Maryland and the District of Columbia, a few from Pennsylvania, and contingents from Virginia, West Virginia, the North Atlantic and New England States. There were, also, transfers of units from other camps and posts. The divisional strength on September 30, 1918, was 18,210, exclusive of the field artillery brigade and the engineer regiment. The total strength as of November 30, 1918, was 24,036.

Late in October, the division received orders to be ready for departure overseas. The advance detachment arrived in France November 8, but the Armistice on November 11 stopped all further overseas troop movements. The demobilization of the division was completed February 5, 1919, except for the Regular Army units. Major General Jesse McI. Carter was the commanding general of the 11th Division.

The colors of the 72d Infantry and of the 33d Field Artillery were presented after the war to the State of Maryland, as the State having the largest representation in these units. Colonel Thomas L. Brewer commanded the 72d Infantry during practically its entire existence. Lt. Col. Charles M. de Bremond commanded the 33d Field Artillery from shortly after organization to October 20, and Colonel Louie A. Beard from that date to demobilization. Other divisional units also contained a considerable percentage of Marylanders.

CHAPTER X

U. S. ARMY—ENLISTMENT, DISCHARGE, ETC.

ENLISTMENT

Eligibility for enlistment in the Army in time of peace extends only to citizens of the United States and to persons who have made a declaration of intention to become citizens. In time of war, the enlistment of aliens of neutral countries is authorized. Under the Selective Service Act, military service was required only of citizens and declarants. The registration, however, covered all aliens as well as citizens, and thousands of non-declarant aliens did not claim exemption and were inducted into the service, although many were subsequently discharged upon claim of exemption. Aliens of enemy countries were, of course, excluded from the service. The Act of May 18, 1917, raised the general maximum age for original enlistments from 35 to 40 years.

The Act of August 24, 1912, provided that after November 1, 1912, enlistments in the Regular Army should be for four years of active service and three years in the Reserve, but furlough to the Reserve allowed after three years of active service. The National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, provided that enlistments should be for three years of active service and four years in the Reserve. Furloughs to Regular Army Reserve were suspended on June 28, 1916, except in the Coast Artillery Corps, and on April 19, 1917, all furloughs to the Reserve were suspended. Enlistment of minors under 18 years of age is for duration of minority; for enlistment under the age of 18 written consent of parents required, and under 16 special permission from the War Department. Enlistments in the Enlisted Reserve Corps were for four years. Enlistments in the National Guard were for three years in an active organization and three years in National Guard Reserve.

The Act of May 18, 1917, provided that "all enlistments, including those in the Regular Army Reserve, which are in force on the date of approval of this Act and which would terminate during the emergency, shall continue in force during the emergency unless sooner discharged". Enlistment for the period of the emergency was authorized in the Regular Army, Enlisted Reserve Corps and National Guard, and the privilege of discharge upon termination of the emergency was extended to those who had enlisted in the Regular Army or Enlisted Reserve Corps since April 1, 1917, or in the National Guard since June 3, 1916. Enlistments in the National Army were, of course, for the period of the emergency.

Under the selective service regulations, after December 15, 1917, registrants were not permitted to enlist in the Army except within narrow restrictions, and on August 8, 1918, in anticipation of the approaching registration extending to ages 18 to 45 inclusive, enlistments were practically stopped except in the case of applications pending on that date. Recruiting for the Army was resumed on March 1, 1919, enlistments being authorized one-third for term of one year and two-thirds for term of three years, without requirement of service in the Reserve.

Inductions under the selective service system were into the National Army for the period of the emergency. There were four registrations: June 5, 1917, ages 21 to 30, inclusive; June 5 and August 24, 1918, those attaining the age of 21 since the last registration; September 12, 1918, ages 18 to 45, inclusive. Inductions under the last registration were comparatively few. After enlistment was restricted on the part of registrants, voluntary induction was still open—that is, application for induction before actual draft. A man who was inducted by local board, but rejected upon examination at camp, was “discharged from draft” and not regarded as having become a member of the military forces. Inductions were stopped on November 11, 1918, the cancellation order applying also to inductees not yet accepted at camp. By way of exception, authorization was issued for completion of inductions into the Students Army Training Corps not later than December 1, 1918, where the offers of induction were dated prior to October 31, 1918.

DISCHARGE

There are three forms of discharge from the Army: (1) honorable discharge, where the soldier's conduct has been such as to warrant his reenlistment; (2) dishonorable discharge, by sentence of court-martial or military commission; (3) discharge other than under (1) or (2). Discharges under (3) are given, prior to expiration of enlistment, on account of undesirability or disqualification due to the man's own misconduct or for fraudulent enlistment. Fraudulent enlistment includes misrepresentation of age by minors in order to secure enlistment without consent of parents. Discharges were obtained in many such cases, usually on the initiative of the parents. The Act of March 16, 1926, as reenacted in amended form March 2, 1929, provides that a soldier who served as an enlisted man in the U. S. Army between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and who was discharged for fraudulent enlistment on account of misrepresentation of age, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged.

GRADES OF RANK

The following are the grades of rank of officers and non-commissioned officers in the Army:

1. General.
2. Lieutenant general.
3. Major general.
4. Brigadier general.
5. Colonel.
6. Lieutenant colonel.
7. Major.
8. Captain.
9. First lieutenant.
10. Second lieutenant.
11. Aviator.
12. Cadet.
13. Nurse (Army Nurse Corps).

14. (a) Sergeant major, regimental; sergeant major, senior grade, Coast Artillery Corps; (b) quartermaster sergeant, senior grade, Quartermaster Corps; master hospital sergeant, Medical Department; master engineer, senior grade, Corps of Engineers; master electrician, Coast Artillery Corps; master electrician, Air Service; master signal electrician; band leader; (c) hospital sergeant, Medical Department; master engineer, junior grade, Corps of Engineers; engineer, Coast Artillery Corps.

15. Ordnance sergeant; quartermaster sergeant, Quartermaster Corps; supply sergeant, regimental.

16. Sergeant major, squadron and battalion; sergeant major, junior grade, Coast Artillery Corps; supply sergeant, battalion.

17. (a) First sergeant; (b) sergeant, first class, Medical Department; sergeant, first class, Quartermaster Corps; sergeant, first class, Corps of Engineers; sergeant, first class, Air Service; sergeant, first class, Signal Corps; electrician sergeant, first class, Coast Artillery Corps; electrician sergeant, Artillery Detachment, United States Military Academy; assistant engineer, Coast Artillery Corps; (c) master gunner, Coast Artillery Corps; master gunner, Artillery Detachment, United States Military Academy; band sergeant and assistant leader, United States Military Academy band; assistant band leader; sergeant bugler; electrician sergeant, second class, Coast Artillery Corps; electrician sergeant, second class, Artillery Detachment, United States Military Academy; radio sergeant.

18. Color sergeant.

19. Sergeant; supply sergeant, company; mess sergeant; stable sergeant; fireman, Coast Artillery Corps.

20. Corporal; corporal bugler.

In each grade and subgrade date of commission, appointment or warrant determines the order of precedence.

Contract surgeons have strictly no rank, although on the footing of first lieutenants. Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, have an officer status ranking after cadets, U. S. Military Academy.

To test the capacity of privates for the duties of noncommissioned officers, company commanders may appoint lance corporals who, however, are not regularly warranted noncommissioned officers.

Enlisted men of the following grades rank below noncommissioned officers, in the order named: private, first class; private. There are, also, the following special ratings: chief mechanic, cook, musician first class, musician second class, musician third class, bugler (or trumpeter), mechanic (or artificer), horseshoer, saddler, farrier, wagoner, chauffeur, oiler, deckhand, assistant steward mine planter.

The appropriate commands for officers of the several grades are as follows:

Major general	Division
Brigadier general	Brigade
Colonel	Regiment
Major	Battalion
Captain	Company

COMPONENT ELEMENTS

The Army during the World War comprised the Regular Army, National Guard, Officers Reserve Corps, Enlisted Reserve Corps and National Army. By War Department order of August 7, 1918, these distinctions were abolished and the use of the single designation U. S. Army was adopted for the whole Army. Further information concerning the several component elements is contained in the foregoing chapter on "The U. S. Army in the War".

ARMS OR BRANCHES OF THE SERVICE

The Army prior to the World War was organized into certain definite arms or branches of the service—namely, General Staff Corps, Adjutant General's Department, Inspector General's Department, Judge Advocate General's Department, Corps of Chaplains, Professors at the Military Academy, Quartermaster Corps, Medical Department, Ordnance Department, Signal Corps, Corps of Engineers, Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery and Coast Artillery. No commissions were issued in the General Staff Corps, which was composed entirely of officers detailed from other arms or branches of the service. Officers were detailed also to other staff corps or departments, in addition to those commissioned therein. During the war, all restrictions were removed and officers were freely assigned to duty with other arms or branches of the service as required.

The war with its vast problem produced extensive changes in Army organization and administration. New and independent arms or branches of the service were created for activities that previously did not exist in the Army or were dependent upon or part of other services—namely, Corps of Interpreters, U. S. Guards, Air Service, Chemical Warfare Service, Tank Corps, Motor Transport Corps, and, in the A. E. F. only, the Transportation Corps, Military Police Corps and Army Service Corps. Administrative agencies were developed, moreover, to consolidate the vast functions of construction, procurement, storage and transportation, previously handled largely by the several bureaus on their own account.

In order to handle the vast construction program entailed by the war, an Officer in Charge of Cantonment Construction was appointed on May 17, 1917. This Cantonment Division, while still subordinate to the Quartermaster Corps as to appropriations and personnel, was substantially an independent organization. The Construction and Repair Division of the Quartermaster Corps was abolished October 10, 1917, and all of its duties transferred to the Cantonment Division. On February 12, 1918, the Cantonment Division was attached to the Operations Division, General Staff, and on March 13, 1918, its name was changed to Construction Division.

At the beginning of the war, the supply functions were divided among several bureaus, with practically no attempt at coordination. Moreover, the supply systems of the several bureaus, especially the Quartermaster Corps, were largely decentralized, without effective central control. The Quartermaster Corps handled general supplies for the whole Army. The other large supply services were the Ordnance Department, Medical Department, Engineer Corps and Signal Corps, each handling their own special requirements, with respect to procurement, storage and distribution, finance and accounting, and inland transportation of supplies. The Quartermaster Corps handled the inland transportation of troops as well as of quartermaster supplies, and also the water transportation of supplies for all of the bureaus. During the war, additional large supply services were brought into being, notably the Construction Division, the Bureau of Aircraft Production and the Chemical Warfare Service.

With the vast increase in Army supply operations consequent upon the war, effective coordination became imperative. The General Staff, as the coordinating and supervising agency of the War Department, gradually evolved the necessary administrative organization. The first step was to unify control of the movement of supplies for the American Expeditionary Forces. The Embarkation Service was created August 4, 1917, for this purpose. Commanding officers were appointed in general charge at the primary ports of embarkation. The Army Transport Service came under the jurisdiction of the Embarkation Service, and in April, 1918, the Water Transportation Branch of the Quartermaster Corps was transferred entirely to the Embarkation Service. On December 28, 1917, the office of Director of Storage and Traffic was created under the Chief of Staff, with jurisdiction extending over the Embarkation Service. There was now created, also, under the Director of Storage and Traffic, an Inland Traffic Service. The Inland Traffic Service was built up mainly upon the corresponding service of the Ordnance Department, which was the most highly developed in this field. There was appointed, also, a Director of Storage, under Storage and Traffic.

The office of Director of Purchases was created, January 11, 1918, under the Chief of Staff. On April 16, 1918, the offices of Purchase and Supply and of Storage and Traffic were combined to form the Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division, having four main branches—namely, Purchase and Supply, Storage, Embarkation, Inland Traffic. There was organized, May 8, 1918, in the Purchase and Supply branch a Finance Section, which became on August 27, 1918, the Accounts Department of Purchase, Storage and Traffic, charged with the coordination of finance and accounting for all Army supplies. In October, 1918, a Director of Finance was appointed, the Finance Department succeeding the former Accounts Department. On June 12, 1918, a Real Estate Unit was organized in the Purchase and Supply branch to handle the procurement of real estate for all of the bureaus, which became on August 27, 1918, the Facilities Department of Purchase, Storage and Traffic, redesignated April 1, 1919, as the Real Estate Service.

On August 27, 1918, the Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division was reorganized as part of a general reorganization of the General Staff. The plans called not only for a more effective coordination, but also for an actual consolidation of operating services in the Army supply system. The consolidation of services proceeded more slowly than coordination and control. In connection with transportation, operating functions were developed from the outset through the Embarkation Service and the Inland Traffic Service. On June 8, 1918, all separate transportation units in the several bureaus were abolished. The control of storage and issue included coordination and supervision, and to some extent the provision of joint facilities. Coordination was effected, also, in the matters of requirements and procurement. Consolidation of procurement proceeded gradually, through consolidating the procurement of specified articles on behalf of all bureaus under the bureau having the largest requirement. The result was mainly to expand the supply functions of the Quartermaster Corps, which became increasingly the great supply bureau of the Army and developed a large and extensive organization.

The big steps towards actual consolidation of the supply services were not taken until just before the Armistice. On October 21, 1918, the offices of the Quartermaster General and of the Director of Purchase and Storage were consolidated. At the same time, the finance unit of the Quartermaster Corps was transferred to the Finance Department. The office of the Director of Purchase and Storage became the great operating agency for procurement, storage and distribution. The subsequent record was that of transfer of corresponding activities and operating units from the other supply bureaus. The Director of Storage took over practically all storage and issue for the Army. The consolidation of procurement was less extensive, not covering the major part of the requirements of the Ordnance Department, Chemical Warfare Service, and Bureau of Aircraft Production, nor highly technical equipment and instruments purchased by other bureaus. Finance and accounting were taken over to the extent of the transfer of procurement and storage.

The consolidation extended also to the field organization. In the Quartermaster Corps, 13 general supply zones were created on July 1, 1918, to centralize control over local procurement. This zone system was taken over by the Director of Purchase and Storage, and zone finance officers were appointed under the Director of Finance. On December 2, 1918, the sub-depot quartermasters at camps and posts were redesignated as camp supply officers, with jurisdiction over all supply activities. Finance officers and port storage officers were appointed, also, at the primary ports of embarkation.

The Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division, as part of the General Staff, was properly a coordinating and supervising agency. During the period of development, there was no clear differentiation between the coordinating functions and the actual operating functions. The final stage was the formation of distinct coordinating units in the Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division and the separation of the operating services. These operating services were the Finance Service (so designated on April 9, 1919), the Purchase and Storage Service (so designated on May 1, 1919), the Transportation Service (established March 11, 1919, by consolidation of the Embarkation Service and the Inland Traffic Service), and the Real Estate Service.

There was, likewise, a process of evolution in the organization of the A. E. F. At General Headquarters, a general staff was built up, consisting ultimately of five sections as follows: (1) administrative; (2) intelligence; (3) operations; (4) supply; (5) training. This staff system was carried into the major tactical commands—that is, army, army corps and division, except that in corps and divisions the fourth section was merged with the first and the fifth section with the third. The theatre of operations of the A. E. F. comprised the "Zone of the Armies" and the "Line of Communications". The Line of Communications embraced all areas behind the zone of active operations. In order to relieve the burden on General Headquarters, the Line of Communications was reorganized in February, 1918, as the Services of Supply. The various services and departments, except Adjutant General, Inspector General and Judge Advocate General, were placed for supply purposes under the Commanding General, Services of Supply, with headquarters at Tours, France.

At headquarters, Services of Supply, a general staff was organized along the same lines as at General Headquarters, except that no fifth section was established and the third section was later merged with the fourth. An adjutant general, inspector general and judge advocate were appointed for the Services of Supply. The chiefs of services and departments were located at headquarters, Services of Supply, although maintaining representatives at General Headquarters. The Services of Supply was organized territorially into three main divisions: base sections, comprising the areas around the ports; an intermediate section, comprising the region of the great storage depots; and an advance section, extending up to the Zone of the Armies.

Administrative departments were developed in the A. E. F. for various important functions, especially the vast operations of purchasing, transportation and construction. The General Purchasing Board was created August 20, 1917, as a coordinating agency consisting of representatives of the principal supply services, headed by the General Purchasing Agent. Railroad transportation in the A. E. F. was early established as an independent service. In December, 1917, the jurisdiction of the Transportation Service was extended over the port operations, by transfer of the Army Transport Service from the Quartermaster Corps. The Motor Transport Service was created December 8, 1917, as a division of the Quartermaster Corps, but was shortly made a separate service. In March, 1918, a Chief of Utilities was appointed under the Commanding General, Services of Supply, to coordinate the Transportation Service, Motor Transport Service, Department of Light Railways and Roads and Department of Construction and Forestry. In July, 1918, the Service of Utilities was abolished, the Transportation Service and the Motor Transport Service again becoming independent services and the Department of Light Railways and Roads and the Department of Construction and Forestry reverting to the Chief Engineer. A Rents, Requisitions and Claims Service was created March 30, 1918, charged with the renting and requisitioning of land and facilities in France, with billeting, and with the settlement of claims. The Judge Advocate, Services of Supply, served as director of the Rents, Requisitions and Claims Service. The following presents some salient facts concerning various arms or branches of the service, relating to the World War period.

General Staff.

There were many changes in the organization of the War Department General Staff during the war, but, as rather definitely settled by War Department order dated August 26, 1918, it comprised an Executive Section, to which were attached a Statistics Branch and a Morale Branch, and four divisions as follows: War Plans Division; Military Intelligence Division; Army Operations Division; and Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division.

The organization of the General Staff in the A. E. F. has been described above.

Adjutant General's Department.

In addition to its ordinary duties, the Adjutant General's Department had charge of the Postal Express Service in the A. E. F. Effective July 1, 1918, the handling of all mail and express for the A. E. F. was taken over by the military authorities. Headquarters of the Postal Express Service of the A. E. F. were established at Tours, France, removed to Paris on October 16, 1918.

Provost Marshal General's Department.

In the United States, the Provost Marshal General's Department was organized for the administration of the selective service system.

In the A. E. F., a Provost Marshal General was appointed July 20, 1917. The department developed into four main sections: military police, prisoner of war escort, criminal investigation and circulation.

Corps of Interpreters.

By War Department order dated July 14, 1917, there was established a Corps of Interpreters, National Army.

Quartermaster Corps.

During the war, various activities were removed from the Quartermaster Corps and transferred to independent services. The Construction Division, Transportation Service, Motor Transport Corps, Finance Department and Real Estate Service took over parts of the Quartermaster organization. Meanwhile, the purchasing and supply functions were enlarged and extended, so that the Quartermaster Corps became increasingly the great supply agency of the Army. In October, 1918, the office of the Quartermaster General was consolidated with the office of the Director of Purchase and Storage, being made the basis for a general consolidation of supply services. After the war, the emergency services were mostly dissolved and the Quartermaster Corps resumed its former functions. The Finance Department, however, was established as an independent bureau of the War Department by the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920.

In the A. E. F., construction work was under the Engineer Corps. A separate Transportation Service was established at an early date and in December, 1917, the Army Transport Service at the ports was transferred from the Quartermaster Corps to the Transportation Service. The Motor Transport Service was removed from the Quartermaster Corps in March, 1918. The Quartermaster Corps in the A. E. F., therefore, was occupied almost exclusively with its vast supply functions, including the Remount Service.

Medical Department.

The Medical Department comprised the officers of the Medical Corps, of the Dental Corps and of the Veterinary Corps, the contract surgeons, the enlisted personnel of the Medical Department, and the Army Nurse Corps. By War Department order dated June 30, 1917, a Sanitary Corps was created in the Medical Department, and by order dated June 23, 1917, the U. S. Army Ambulance Service.

Ordnance Department.

In June, 1918, the production and supply of materials for gas warfare was taken over from the Ordnance Department by the newly-created Chemical Warfare Service.

Corps of Engineers.

There were separated parts of the Engineer Corps in the formation of the Tank Corps and of the Chemical Warfare Service, as set forth below under these headings.

In the A. E. F., construction and forestry were under the Corps of Engineers. Transportation was at first placed under the Chief Engineer, but was shortly established as an independent service. The Engineer Corps continued to perform construction work for the Transportation Service, and the control of light railways and roads was later returned to the Engineer Corps.

Signal Corps.

Aviation was originally under the Signal Corps, but was separated therefrom in May, 1918.

Cavalry.

The Cavalry regiments were mostly converted into Field Artillery for World War service, since the use of Cavalry in the A. E. F. was very limited.

U. S. Guards.

The U. S. Guards were organized under order dated December 22, 1917, in order to release troops for overseas service who were employed on guard duty in this country. The U. S. Guards were recruited by enlistment of men not subject to draft and by transfer of men found unfit for overseas service.

Air Service.

At the beginning of the war, aviation was under the Signal Corps. By Act of October 1, 1917, the Aircraft Board was created as an advisory body in aircraft production. Under date of April 24, 1918, there were definitely organized within the Signal Corps the Division of Military Aeronautics and the Division of Production. By Executive Order, May 20, 1918, these services were separated from the Signal Corps and established independently as the Division of Military Aeronautics and the Bureau of Aircraft Production. These were combined on August 28, 1918, under the Director of Air Service.

In the A. E. F., a Chief Aviation Officer was appointed on May 26, 1917, redesignated on September 3, 1917, as Chief of Air Service. The Air Service, however, was dependent for personnel and material until May, 1918, when aviation was entirely separated from the Signal Corps.

Chemical Warfare Service.

A Director of Gas Service was appointed in October, 1917, reporting to the Chief of Staff, War Department. This officer, however, had only advisory functions. The Chemical Warfare Service was created by War Department order dated June 28, 1918, to consolidate the various activities relating to gas warfare, including the research work previously conducted by the Bureau of Mines at the American University Experiment Station, the gas defense production by the Medical Department, the gas offense production by the Ordnance Department, the Chemical Service Section, National Army, created November 1, 1917, the Gas Training Section, started by the Medical Department but transferred in April, 1918, to the Corps of Engineers, and the gas offense troops—namely, the 30th Engineers or Gas and Flame Regiment.

In the A. E. F., a Chief of Gas Service was appointed September 3, 1917. The Gas Service, however, was dependent upon other services for personnel and material until the creation of the Chemical Warfare Service in June, 1918.

Tank Corps.

The Tank Service was authorized on February 18, 1918, under the Corps of Engineers. The 65th Regiment, Engineers, was organized as a tank unit. Under date of March 6, 1918, the Tank Corps was established as a separate arm of the service. By the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920, the separate Tank Corps was abolished and tank units were made a part of the Infantry.

Motor Transport Corps.

By War Department order dated April 18, 1918, the Motor Transport Service was established as a division of the Quartermaster Corps, with jurisdiction over "all motor-propelled vehicles except tanks, caterpillars and other artillery tractors". By order effective August 31, 1918, the Motor Transport Corps was established as a separate arm or branch of the service. The functions of the Motor Transport Corps covered the technical supervision of all motor vehicles (except tanks and tractors of the caterpillar type), including maintenance and repair, and the operation of all motor vehicles used for general transportation purposes and not definitely assigned to organization units of combat divisions. The procurement of motor vehicles, which was covered in the authorization of the Motor Transport Corps, was returned to the Quartermaster Corps by order dated September 5, 1918.

In the A. E. F., the Motor Transport Service was established December 8, 1917, as a division of the Quartermaster Corps. It was charged with the supply and technical supervision of motor vehicles, including maintenance and repair, to which was later added the operation of motor vehicles used for general transportation purposes and not definitely assigned to organization units of combat divisions. In March, 1918, the Motor Transport Service was removed from the Quartermaster Corps and placed under the Service of Utilities. When the Service of Utilities was abolished, July 11, 1918, the Motor Transport Service, redesignated Motor Transport Corps, became an independent service of the Services of Supply.

Transportation Corps.

In the A. E. F., transportation was originally placed under the Chief Engineer. Upon organization of the Line of Communications, August 13, 1917, a Department of Military Railways was established with a director who was a staff officer of the commanding general, Line of Communications. The Department of Military Railways was charged with the handling of all railroad transportation for the A. E. F., including the actual operation of railroads. By order dated September 14, 1917, the Transportation Service was definitely established as a separate department in the A. E. F., under a Director General of Transportation. In December, 1917, the jurisdiction of the Transportation Service was extended over the port operations, by transfer of the Army Transport Service from the Quartermaster Corps. In March, 1918, the Transportation Service was made a part of the Service of Utilities, in the Services of Supply. The Service of Utilities was abolished July 11, 1918, and the Transportation Service again became a separate department of the Services of Supply. The Department of Light Railways and Roads reverted to the Chief Engineer, A. E. F. The Corps of Engineers continued to perform construction work for the Transportation Service, even after the organization of the Transportation Corps. By order dated September 7, 1918, the Transportation Corps was organized as a distinct arm or branch of the service in the A. E. F. The Transportation Service, later Transportation Corps, in the A. E. F. is to be distinguished from the Transportation Service formed under the Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division of the General Staff, War Department.

Military Police Corps.

The Military Police Corps was established in the A. E. F. as a distinct arm or branch of the service by order dated July 8, 1918, but its organization was not actually carried out until October-November, 1918.

Army Service Corps.

The Army Service Corps was created in the A. E. F. by order of Headquarters, Services of Supply, dated August 22, 1918. Its purpose was to furnish personnel for various special services that had grown up in the A. E. F., not pertaining to any of the established corps. The personnel for such services had previously been secured by detail from the established corps, amounting by and large to a considerable detriment to the service. The Labor Bureau, which had been organized under the General Purchasing Board for the purpose of securing and administering civilian labor, was now placed under the director of the Army Service Corps. The Army Service Corps also furnished personnel for the Rents, Requisitions and Claims Service, for prisoner of war administration, for guard companies, for depot service companies, and for miscellaneous duties.

ORGANIZATION UNITS

It is not practicable herein to give the "Tables of Organization" of all units of the U. S. Army. The following presents in condensed form the composition of the Infantry Division (Combat), from "Tables of Organization, Series of 1918":

 - Company, animal drawn (88)
 - 3 Company, motor (89)

The figures shown before the titles of organizations are the number of such units, if more than one, in the next higher organization—e. g., two Infantry brigades in a division.

The figures shown after the titles of organizations are maximum strength.

The principal armament of a division comprised 48 guns of 75 mm. calibre, 24 howitzers of 155 mm. calibre, 260 machine guns and 17,153 rifles.

A company or equivalent organization is the lowest administrative unit. A company is subdivided into platoons or into sections, and the platoons into sections or into squads.

In the Cavalry, the units corresponding to company and battalion are termed, respectively, troop and squadron. A sector of Anti-Aircraft Artillery corresponds to a battalion. A repair unit, Motor Transport Corps, is formed of several repair groups, consisting of sections. A motor command, Motor Transport Corps, is formed of several companies or units. In the Air Service, the lowest administrative unit is termed squadron, and in rising order group, wing, brigade, division. A squadron is subdivided into flights.

Other single administrative units are variously designated as follows: train (engineer; hospital; pack; ponton; water tank), repair shop (ordnance), laboratory, section, unit, squad, detachment. Ambulance units serving with the American Army were designated as companies, whereas units of the U. S. Army Ambulance Service with the French Army were designated as sections. These ambulance sections must be distinguished from the ambulance section of a sanitary train, comprising four companies. The term detachment, besides being used in some instances for distinct organization units, applies in general to any group detached from own organization and operating under separate command. The terms hospital, park, shop, depot, and school are applied to organizations varying from small single administrative units to large organizations.

The following list shows, by arms or branches of the service, the types of organizations of the U. S. Army, as listed in the Organization Directory, issues of January 25, 1919, and of May 17, 1919. This comprises substantially all World War organizations, but does not show the earlier designations where re-organized or redesignated during the war period.

TERRITORIAL DEPARTMENTS

Effective May 1, 1917, the existing orders establishing the territorial departments were amended so as to organize six departments within the continental United States as follows:

Northeastern Department.....headquarters, Boston, Mass.
 Eastern Department.....headquarters, Governor's Island, N. Y.
 Southeastern Department.....headquarters, Charleston, S. C.
 Central Department.....headquarters, Chicago, Ill.
 Southern Department.....headquarters, Fort Sam Houston, Tex.
 Western Department.....headquarters, San Francisco, Cal.

The Philippine and the Hawaiian Departments remained unchanged. The Canal Zone, previously under the Eastern Department, was constituted as the Panama Canal Department, effective July 1, 1917. The departments served for purposes of general command and administration, subject to important exceptions.

Also effective May 1, 1917, the Coast Artillery districts were reorganized so as to be embraced in the respective territorial departments, as follows:

- North Atlantic District (embraced in Northeastern Department)— headquarters, Boston, Mass.
- Middle Atlantic District (embraced in Eastern Department)— headquarters, Fort Totten, N. Y.
- South Atlantic District (embraced in Southeastern Department)— headquarters, Charleston, S. C.
- North Pacific District (embraced in Western Department)— headquarters, Seattle, Wash.
- South Pacific District (embraced in Western Department)— headquarters, Fort Miley, Cal.

DECORATIONS.

A decoration may be defined as an insignia of honor bestowed for some individual act or service, in contradistinction to a service medal commemorative of some war or campaign, which is for general distribution to all who participated. The Victory Medal is the service medal for World War service in the military or naval forces of the United States.

The Act of July 9, 1918, authorized Army decorations as follows: Medal of Honor; Distinguished Service Cross; Distinguished Service Medal. The Medal of Honor existed in the Army since 1862, but the conditions of its award were now altered to some extent. The D. S. C. and D. S. M. were new decorations, although it was provided that the D. S. M. should be issued to all existing holders of the certificate of merit in lieu thereof. The Act provided that no more than one M. H., D. S. C. or D. S. M. should be issued to any one person, but that, for each succeeding deed or act justifying an additional medal of the identical kind, there should be issued instead a bar or other suitable device. This is the Oak Leaf Cluster.

The Medal of Honor is awarded "in the name of the Congress" and is accordingly known as the Congressional Medal of Honor. The D. S. C. and the D. S. M. are not awarded "in the name of the Congress". Authority to award the medals is conferred on the President, who may, however, delegate his authority to the commanding general of a separate army or higher unit in the field. The awards are published in War Department General Orders, together with the citations reciting the acts or conduct upon which the awards are based. A medal may be awarded posthumously and presented to a representative of the deceased.

The Medal of Honor is awarded "to each person who, while an officer or enlisted man of the Army, shall hereafter in action involving actual conflict with an enemy, distinguish himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty".

The D. S. C. is awarded "to any person who, while serving in any capacity with the Army of the United States since April 6, 1917, has distinguished or shall hereafter distinguish himself or herself by extraordinary heroism in connection with military operations against an armed enemy”.

The D. S. M. is awarded “to any person who, while serving in any capacity with the Army of the United States since April 6, 1917, has distinguished or shall hereafter distinguish himself or herself by especially meritorious service to the Government in a duty of great responsibility”.

The Act of July 9, 1918, further authorized a Silver Star for gallantry citations, under the following provisions as amended by the Act of January 24, 1920: “And for each citation of an officer or enlisted man for gallantry in action, published in orders issued from the headquarters of a force commanded by, or which is the appropriate command of, a general officer, not warranting the award of a medal of honor or distinguished service cross, he shall be permitted to wear, as the President shall direct, a silver star three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter.” This Silver Star is authorized to be worn on the ribbon of the Victory Medal. Where there are successive citations for the same act of gallantry, the highest citation only warrants a Silver Star—e.g., a citation by G. H. Q., A. E. F., supersedes in this respect a divisional citation. After G. H. Q., A. E. F., was dissolved, some citations were published in War Department General Orders, similarly warranting a Silver Star.

Citations for meritorious services other than “gallantry in action” carry no decoration of any kind. In order, however, to provide for cases not warranting a D. S. M., there was issued by G. H. Q., A. E. F., the so-called Meritorious Services Citation Certificate, reading “For exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous services” and reciting briefly the services upon which based.

The Act of July 9, 1918, set a time limit of three years from the date of the act justifying the award of a medal. By special exception, however, awards of the D. S. M. or of the D. S. C. were authorized if warranted in existing cases, although dating back more than three years, where recommended for the Medal of Honor but not justifying the award thereof or where mentioned in official orders. The Act of April 7, 1922, extended the time limit for awards on account of World War service for a period of one year from date—namely, to April 7, 1923. After that date, no further awards for World War service were authorized until the passage of the Act of May 26, 1928, which provided as follows: “That all recommendations for decoration by the United States of America now pending before the War Department, Navy Department, or Marine Corps for services rendered during the World War be considered by the proper boards or authorities, and awards made in such cases as the conduct of those recommended shows them to be entitled and deserving of the same”.

The Act of July 9, 1918, further provided as follows: “That any and all members of the military forces of the United States serving in the present war be, and they are hereby, permitted and authorized to accept during the present war or within one year thereafter, from the Government of any of the countries engaged in war with any country with which the United States is or shall be concurrently likewise engaged in war, such decorations, when tendered, as are conferred by such Government upon the members of its own military forces." The time limit prescribed in this Act expired on July 1, 1922. By several Acts of Congress, however, the acceptance of foreign decorations was subsequently authorized in a large number of individual cases of officers of the Army, including the Officers Reserve Corps.

To foreigners	164
(Including 2 Oak Leaf Clusters)

The total number of Silver Star citations for World War service is estimated at about 40,000, including 862 in War Department General Orders, and about 5,000 in Citation Orders, General Headquarters, A. E. F. The total number of Meritorious Services Citation Certificates issued by G. H. Q., A. E. F., is approximately 4,200.

The total number of foreign decorations awarded to members of the United States military forces, welfare workers and other American civilians who rendered meritorious service to the Allied cause, is approximately 18,000. The statistics, by countries, are shown in the following table published in the 1924 Report of the Secretary of War, subject, however, to later correction:

Belgium	784
China	16
Cuba	1
Czechoslovakia	34
France	14,154
Great Britain	1,231

Russia	86
Serbia	64
Total	18,097

The French Croix de Guerre was conferred on various organization units of the A. E. F., in recognition of extraordinary services in action. Such awards in themselves do not entitle the individual members of the organizations to any decoration. After an organization, however, has been twice cited in orders of the Army, carrying in each instance the Croix de Guerre with Palm, the Fourragere is thereupon awarded in the colors of the Croix de Guerre. After four such citations, the Fourragere is changed to one in the colors of the Medaille Militaire and after six citations to one in the color of the Legion of Honor. The Fourragere in the colors of the Croix de Guerre was awarded to the organizations composing the 1st and 2d Divisions, with a few exceptions, and to one aero squadron and two ambulance sections. The Fourragere in the colors of the Medaille Militaire was awarded to one ambulance section. The Fourragere is primarily an organization decoration, entitling every member of such organization thereafter to wear the distinctive shoulder cord, regardless of whether he was a member of the organization at the time of the actions upon which the award was based. Where, however, a member was present on each occasion for which the organization was cited, he is entitled to the Fourragere as an individual decoration, even after separation from such organization. The War Department has prescribed special authorization for the Fourragere as an individual decoration. The 1931 Report of the Secretary of War states that such authorization has been issued in 1,659 cases.

CHAPTER XI

U. S. NAVY—ENLISTMENT, DISCHARGE, ETC.

ENLISTMENT

The regular term of enlistment in the Navy was four years, with provision for voluntary extension for one, two, or three years. During the war, the general maximum age for original enlistment was raised from 30 to 35 years. Minors under 18 years of age were enlisted for duration of minority—that is, until reaching the age of 21. For enlistment of minors under the age of 18 written consent of parents required, and under 17 special permission from the Navy Department. Enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force was in all cases for four years. The general maximum age for original enrollment was 40 years. Enlistment in the Naval Militia was for three years and reenlistment for one, two, or three years.

Enlistment for the duration of the war was authorized January 11, 1918, and the privilege of discharge upon termination of the emergency was subsequently extended to all wartime enlistments, taking February 3, 1917, as the initial date. The Reserve Force personnel in general was simply released from active duty status, not discharged, at the end of the war.

Enlistments and enrollments were practically stopped on August 8, 1918, in anticipation of the extension of the selective draft to the Navy. Inductions into the Navy were mostly voluntary—that is, upon individual application before actual draft. Enlistments were resumed December 3, 1918, for two, three, and four year periods.

Enlistment in the Coast Guard was for one year, but there was a high degree of permanence in the personnel. In 1918, enlistment for the period of the war was authorized, and existing enlistments were largely converted.

DISCHARGE

There are four forms of discharge in the Navy: (1) honorable; (2) ordinary; (3) bad conduct; (4) dishonorable. Honorable discharge is given upon expiration of enlistment, where the man has received the required marks for proficiency and conduct and is recommended for reenlistment. Honorable discharge may be given, also, in case of physical disability incurred in line of duty. By special provision, also, in cases of first enlistment between August 29, 1916, and March 3, 1917, inclusive, honorable discharge might be granted in time of peace during the months of June or December, after completion of one year's service at sea. The Act of July 11, 1919, authorized issuance of honorable discharges prior to expiration of term of enlistment to persons enlisted between the dates February 3, 1917, and November 11, 1918, where the date of discharge was subsequent to November 11, 1918. Bad conduct and dishonorable discharges are given as the result of court-martial.

The ordinary form of discharge is used upon expiration of enlistment where the man is not entitled to an honorable discharge. It is used, also, in cases of discharge prior to expiration of enlistment and may be under honorable conditions, as upon special order for the convenience of the individual, or may be not under honorable conditions, on account of undesirability or disqualification due to the man's own misconduct or fraudulent enlistment. In the case of fraudulent enlistment of minors by misrepresentation of age, the discharge was regarded as under honorable conditions if granted upon request of parents, but not under honorable conditions if granted upon the man's own request. The Act of January 19, 1929, provides that a member of the Navy or Marine Corps who was enlisted between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and who was discharged for fraudulent enlistment on account of misrepresentation of age, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged.

By the Act of May 18, 1920, grades of rank and ratings in the Coast Guard were assimilated in general to those in the Navy.

The appropriate grade of rank of commanding officers of Navy vessels depends upon the size and calibre—battleships and cruisers of the first class being commanded by captains and so on down to the smaller vessels. A division or larger force of battleships or cruisers of the first class is usually commanded by a flag officer (above the rank of captain), but groups of smaller vessels may be commanded by officers of lower rank.

COMPONENT ELEMENTS

The Navy during the World War comprised the Regular Navy, Naval Militia enrolled as National Naval Volunteers, Naval Reserve Force and U. S. Coast Guard. Further information concerning these several component elements is contained in the foregoing chapter on "The U. S. Navy in the War".

BRANCHES OF THE SERVICE

Officers in the Navy are divided into officers of the line and staff officers. Staff officers are of the following corps: Medical Corps; Dental Corps; Supply Corps (Pay Corps prior to Act of July 11, 1919); Corps of Chaplains; Professors of Mathematics; Construction Corps; Civil Engineer Corps. Officers of the line in some cases are for engineering duties only or for aeronautic duties only. In the Naval Reserve Force, officers of the line are for deck or for engineering duties. Class five of the Reserve is designated as Flying Corps. Boatswains, gunners and machinists are classed as line officers, and carpenters, pay clerks, sail-makers and pharmacists as staff officers. Machinists are for engineering duties only.

The enlisted personnel of the Navy is not divided into corps as in the officer personnel, but into branches as follows: seaman branch, artificer branch, special branch, messman branch. The Flying Corps, however, is so designated, as well as the Hospital Corps comprising pharmacists' mates and hospital apprentices. The Nurse Corps (female) is, of course, distinct.

ORGANIZATION OF THE FLEETS

The U. S. Atlantic Fleet, as shown in the Navy Directory, November 1, 1918, comprised the following:

U. S. Atlantic Fleet

(Note:—A large part of the fleet listed below was on duty in the war zone, constituting the "U. S. Naval Forces Operating in European Waters", under special command.)

Battleship Force One

Squadron One

Divisions A, One and Two (total 11 ships)

Squadron Two

Divisions Three to Five (total 14 ships)

Battleship Force Two

Squadron Three

Divisions Six and Seven (total 6 ships)

Squadron Four

Divisions Eight and Nine (total 9 ships)

Cruiser Force

Squadrons One and Two—3 divisions each

Divisions One to Six (total 27 ships)

American Patrol Detachment

Squadron One

Divisions One and Two (total 13 vessels, including small cruisers, gunboats, etc.)

Patrol Force

Squadrons One to Four—3 divisions each

Divisions One to Twelve (total 59 vessels, including small cruisers, gunboats, Coast Guard cutters, converted yachts, etc.)

Unassigned, Special Duty (18 vessels, including tugs, cross channel transports, etc.)

Destroyer Force

Flotillas A and One to Seven—3 divisions each

Divisions A to C and One to Twenty-one (total 140 vessels, plus flotilla tenders)

Submarine Force

Divisions One to Fifteen (total 79 vessels, plus division tenders)

Mine Force

Mine Squadron One (10 vessels, including mine-planters and converted vessels)

Mine-Sweeping Group One (7 vessels, including tugs, etc.)

Train (25 vessels, including hospital ships, supply ships, colliers, ammunition tenders, tugs)

Submarine Chasers

USS Henley Group (9 vessels)

USS Patterson Group (9 vessels)

USS Salem Group (12 vessels)

Base 2 (9 vessels)

Base 6, Queenstown, Ireland (30 vessels)

Base 13, Azores Islands (18 vessels)

Base 25, Corfu, Greece (36 vessels)

Base 27, Plymouth, England (34 vessels)

Base 29, Cardiff, Wales (2 vessels)

First to Fifteenth Naval Districts (total 134 vessels)

Nova Scotia, Canada (6 vessels)

Transport Force (41 vessels)

Naval Overseas Transportation Service

Navy account (74 vessels)

Shipping Control Account (170 vessels)

During the war period, the naval strength of the United States was concentrated almost entirely in the Atlantic. As of November 1, 1918, there were 20 vessels in the U. S. Pacific Fleet, 28 vessels in the U. S. Asiatic Fleet, and 9 vessels unassigned or on detached service. There were 218 vessels "fitting out". In addition to the vessels composing the fleets, there were about 120 vessels assigned to the naval districts, not counting small motor boats, etc.

NAVAL DISTRICTS

For purposes of general command and administration, the sea and lake coasts were divided into naval districts, as follows:

No.	Limits	Headquarters
1	Eastport, Me., to include Chatham, Mass.	Boston
2	Chatham to include New London, Conn.	Naval Station, Narragansett Bay
3	New London to include Barnegat, N. J.	New York

No.	Limits	Headquarters
4	Barnegat to southern boundary of Md.....	Philadelphia
5	Md. boundary to include New River Inlet, N. C..... (Including all Chesapeake Bay and tributaries)	Norfolk
6	New River Inlet to include Jupiter Inlet, Fla.....	Charleston
7	Jupiter Inlet to include Tampa, Fla.....	Key West
8	Tampa to include Rio Grande.....	New Orleans
9	Lake Michigan	Chicago
10	Lakes Erie and Ontario
11	Lakes Huron and Superior
12	Southern boundary to latitude 42° N.....	San Francisco
13	Latitude 42° N. to northern boundary.....	Seattle
14	Hawaii and islands of Pacific Station, except Samoa.....	Honolulu
15	Waters adjacent to Panama Canal Zone.....	Canal Zone

(Note:—Established in November, 1917)

The various naval activities on shore and in coastal waters were grouped as far as possible under the authority of the district commandants.

There were thirteen Coast Guard districts, embracing the entire coast line of the United States, concerned chiefly with life-saving duties and shore and inland work. These districts had somewhat different limits than the naval districts. The cruising service of the Coast Guard was organized, for administrative purposes, under seven divisions as follows: Eastern Division; New York Division; Norfolk Division; Gulf Division; Southern Division, Pacific Coast; Northern Division, Pacific Coast; Lakes Division.

DECORATIONS

The Act of February 4, 1919, authorized Navy decorations as follows: Medal of Honor; Distinguished Service Medal; Navy Cross. The Medal of Honor existed in the Navy since 1861, but the conditions of its award were now altered to some extent. The D. S. M. and Navy Cross were new decorations. The Act provided that not more than one M. H., D. S. M. or N. C. should be issued to any one person, but for each succeeding deed or act justifying an additional medal of the identical kind, there should be issued instead a bar or other suitable device. A gold five-pointed star has been adopted for this purpose.

The Medal of Honor is awarded "in the name of Congress" and is accordingly known as the Congressional Medal of Honor. The D. S. M. and the Navy Cross are not awarded "in the name of Congress". Authority to award the medals is conferred on the President, who may, however, delegate his authority to award the Navy Cross "to flag officers who are commanders in chief or commanding on important independent duty". The Navy awards for World War service were based upon recommendations by superior officers, which were reviewed by a board of awards, subject to final decision by the Secretary of the Navy. The awards were issued under date of November 11, 1920, with the exception of a few later cases. The awards were not published in Navy Department General Orders.

The Medal of Honor is awarded "to any person who, while in the naval service of the United States, shall, in action involving actual conflict with the enemy, distinguish himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty and without detriment to the mission of his command or the command to which attached".

The D. S. M. is awarded "to any person who, while in the naval service of the United States, since the sixth day of April, nineteen hundred and seventeen, has distinguished or who hereafter shall distinguish himself by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government in a duty of great responsibility".

The Navy Cross is awarded "to any person who, while in the naval service of the United States, since the sixth day of April, nineteen hundred and seventeen, has distinguished, or who shall hereafter distinguish himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service in the line of his profession, such heroism or service not being sufficient to justify the award of a medal of honor or a distinguished service medal".

The conditions for award of the Medal of Honor and of the D. S. M. are similar to the Army. There is a marked difference, however, between the Navy Cross and the Distinguished Service Cross. The D. S. C. is awarded only for "extraordinary heroism in connection with military operations against an armed enemy". The Navy Cross is awarded either for "extraordinary heroism", not restricted to operations against the enemy, or for "distinguished service", ranking below the Medal of Honor or the D. S. M., respectively.

Upon recommendation of the board of awards, the so-called Special Letter of Commendation was issued in cases deserving of recognition, but not warranting the award of a medal. The recipients of the Special Letter are authorized to wear a Silver Star on the ribbon of the Victory Medal.

The Act of February 4, 1919, set a time limit of five years from the date of the act justifying the award of a medal. By special exception, however, awards of the D. S. M. or of the Navy Cross were authorized if warranted in existing cases, although dating back more than five years, where recommended for the Medal of Honor but not justifying the award thereof. Further awards for World War service were authorized by the Act of May 26, 1928, which provided as follows: "That all recommendations for decorations by the United States of America, now pending before the War Department, Navy Department, or Marine Corps for services rendered during the World War be considered by the proper boards or authorities, and awards made in such cases as the conduct of those recommended shows them to be entitled and deserving of the same".

CHAPTER XII

U. S. MARINE CORPS—ENLISTMENT, DISCHARGE, ETC.

ENLISTMENT

The regular term of enlistment in the Marine Corps was four years. Enlistment of minors under 18 years of age under substantially the same conditions as in the Navy. By the Act of May 22, 1917, enlistments were authorized for the duration of the war, and the privilege of discharge upon termination of the emergency was subsequently extended to all wartime enlistments, taking February 3, 1917, as the initial date. Enrollment in the Reserve was for four years, and the Reserve personnel was in general simply released from active duty, not discharged, at the end of the war.

Enlistments and enrollments were practically stopped on August 8, 1918, in anticipation of the extension of the selective draft to the Marine Corps. All inductions into the Marine Corps were voluntary and subject to the usual Marine Corps recruiting standards. Enlistments were resumed December 4, 1918.

DISCHARGE

There are four classes of discharge in the Marine Corps: (1) honorable; (2) discharge without honor; (3) bad conduct; (4) dishonorable. Class (2) includes cases of discharge on account of undesirability or disqualification due to the man's own misconduct or fraudulent enlistment. Bad conduct and dishonorable discharges are given as the result of court-martial.

GRADES OF RANK

Commissioned officers in the Marine Corps have the same titles and relative rank as in the Army. Warrant officer grades are as follows: marine gunner, quartermaster clerk, pay clerk. Warrant officers in the Marine Corps have the same relative rank as Navy warrant officers.

Noncommissioned officer grades in the Marine Corps are as follows: sergeant major, quartermaster sergeant, first sergeant, gunnery sergeant, drum major, leader of band, second leader of band, sergeant, corporal. Enlisted grades below noncommissioned officers are drummer, trumpeter and private. By the Act of July 1, 1918, the grade of private first class was authorized in the Marine Corps. Minors under 18 years of age may be enlisted as "apprentice to learn drum and trumpet", being rated as drummer or trumpeter upon qualification.

COMPONENT ELEMENTS

The Marine Corps during the World War comprised the regular Marine Corps, the Marine Corps branch of the Naval Militia enrolled as National Naval Volunteers, and the Marine Corps Reserve. Further information concerning the several component elements is contained in the chapter on "The U. S. Marine Corps in the War".

BRANCHES OF THE SERVICE

There are staff departments in the Marine Corps as follows: Adjutant and Inspector; Quartermaster; Paymaster. After August 29, 1916, no permanent appointments were made in the staff departments, officers then holding permanent staff appointments retaining their status, but future staff vacancies being filled by detail of line officers for periods of four years. The Chaplain Corps, Medical Corps, Dental Corps and Nurse Corps of the Navy serve also the Marine Corps.

Line officers in some cases are for aeronautic duties only. Class five of the Reserve is designated as Flying Corps.

The Marine Corps consists substantially of infantry and machine gun troops. There is, of course, special training of personnel in engineering, signaling, mining, artillery and aviation. Apart from aviation, however, there was practically no organization of special troops, except an artillery force constituting part of the Advanced Base Force for service with the Navy, and an artillery regiment organized at Quantico in 1918 and trained for service in France with the 7-inch naval guns installed on tractor mounts.

ORGANIZATION UNITS

Organization units in the Marine Corps are similar to the Army.

DECORATIONS

The Navy decorations pertain also to the Marine Corps, as part of the naval service. Army decorations and citations were awarded to Marines serving with the American Expeditionary Forces.

The Marine Corps reports awards of United States decorations to Marines for World War service as follows:

Medal of Honor (Navy).....	7
D. S. M. (Navy).....	22
Navy Cross.....	393
Medal of Honor (Army).....	5
D. S. M. (Army).....	11
D. S. C. (Army).....	352

The French Fourragere in the colors of the Croix de Guerre was conferred on 7,481 members of the Marine Corps.

The Marine Corps is a branch of the United States Navy, and its members are subject to the same laws and regulations as the Navy. The Marine Corps is a fighting force, and its members are trained for combat. The Marine Corps is a proud and distinguished branch of the United States Armed Forces.

DECORATIONS AND CITATIONS

The following lists cover awards of decorations and citations for World War service in the U. S. Army, U. S. Navy and U. S. Marine Corps. The awards include decorations and citations of the U. S. Army, of the U. S. Navy, and of foreign countries, alphabetically.

The grade of rank shown is as of the date of the act constituting the basis of the award, or at the termination of the period of service covered. Where more than one award of the same honor, the grade of rank shown relates to the latest award. Where no specific citation or grounds of award, the grade of rank is shown as in the order or decree conferring the honor or at the termination of distinctly World War service.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

General.

The records herein include only cases where active service in the U. S. Army, Navy or Marine Corps at some time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, inclusive.

The records are as furnished by the War Department, Navy Department and Marine Corps. No alterations or additions have been made in the service records, without official confirmation. In the matter of personal data, however, such as name, address, place and date of birth, personal sources have been utilized, if reliable, although differing from the official records.

The records cover the several items in their order as indicated below.

1. Name and race or color.

A star is placed before the name, where died in World War service under honorable conditions.

The Navy and Marine Corps cards show the full name. The Army cards generally show only the initial of the middle name, but the full name is used herein if available from other source. In accordance with accepted practice, the terms "Sr.", "Jr.", etc., are omitted, since not part of the name but merely a means of identification that is unnecessary where date of birth is shown.

Where the War Department carries the service record under one form of the name, but recognizes a different name or spelling to the extent of cross-referencing under it, whether or not determining which is the correct name, then, if the correct name is satisfactorily established from other source, the record herein is placed under the correct name, and cross-indexed under the other name or spelling. Where, however, the correct name is satisfactorily established from other source, but it is not recognized by the War Department to the extent of cross-referencing under it, then the record herein is placed under the name as shown on the official card and cross-indexed under the correct name.

White race is implied unless otherwise specified. An italic "c" after the name indicates "colored".

2. Address.

The address on the official cards is the residence address as given at the time of joining the service, or, where joined prior to April 6, 1917, the latest address of record prior to that date. Where reliable data is in hand showing true address different from the official record, the true address is used herein.

3. Place of birth and date of birth or age.

Age is shown as of the date of joining the service, or, if already in the service prior to April 6, 1917, then as of that date. Where reliable data is in hand showing the correct place and date of birth different from the official record, the correct data is used herein.

4. Date of joining the service, component part of the forces, grades of rank and ratings and officer's arm or branch of the service.

The service records herein start from April 6, 1917. If already in the service prior to that date, no initial date is shown, but, if joined the service on or after April 6, 1917, the date of joining is shown as the initial date.

The words "commissioned", "appointed", "enlisted" and "enrolled" are omitted, since implied in the statement of the component part of the forces and the grade of rank. "Inducted" is used, however, implying Army unless Navy or Marine Corps is specified. The official cards make no distinction between voluntary induction and induction by draft. Where the man failed to report at the date fixed in the induction order, but reported or apprehended at a later date, the date of actual forwarding to camp is used as the initial date. The term "delivered" is used where the records do not show whether voluntarily reported or apprehended. The place of induction is shown if different from the residence.

Component parts of the forces as follows: Regular Army, National Guard, National Army, Officers Reserve Corps, Enlisted Reserve Corps, Army Nurse Corps; Regular Navy, Naval Militia (enrolled as National Naval Volunteers, later Naval Reserve Force), Naval Reserve Force, Coast Guard; Regular Marine Corps, Marine Corps Reserve. Army inductions were into the National Army.

The grades of rank as shown are those under which actual serving, without distinguishing temporary and permanent. Where appointed in a lower permanent rank while serving in a higher temporary rank, the lower permanent rank is not shown. Officers of the regular service reverted to their permanent grades of rank upon discharge from their temporary commissions.

By subsequent Act of Congress relating to the World War period, the posthumous issuance of commissions in the Army was authorized in cases where the appointment had been made but had not become effective due to death intervening prior to acceptance and execution of oath of office. There is, however, no similar provision applicable to the Navy and Marine Corps. In Navy and Marine Corps cases, the grade of rank is shown in parentheses, where appointed but not effective.

Where members of the Marine Corps were temporarily assigned to the Dominican Guardia Nacional or the Haitian Gendarmerie, they were still carried on the rolls of the Marine Corps. The official cards in these cases show only the grades of rank in the Marine Corps, although holding higher grades in the Guardia Nacional or the Gendarmerie.

The arm or branch of the service as shown with the grade of rank is that in which commissioned. In some cases, commissions were issued in the Army without specifying arm or branch. Navy and Marine Corps officers are of the line unless a staff corps is specified.

During the war, Army officers, although commissioned in particular arms or branches of the service, were freely detailed or assigned to duty with other arms or branches as required. An officer was impliedly performing the duties of his own arm or branch, unless otherwise distinctly indicated by the organization or assignment. Where the organization or assignment is distinctly of a particular arm or branch, the officer was impliedly performing the duties of that arm or branch, unless otherwise specified. Where, however, the assignment is to headquarters of a tactical organization higher than a regiment or to a general camp or post, no particular arm or branch is distinctly indicated and the officer was impliedly performing the duties of his own arm or branch, unless otherwise specified.

In the Navy, staff officers always performed the duties of their own branch or corps. Line officers were sometimes assigned to duties pertaining to a staff corps, as indicated in the statement of assignments.

In the Marine Corps, with the exception of a few staff appointments dating prior to July 29, 1916, all commissions were simply in the U. S. Marine Corps. Officers were, of course, subject to detail to staff duty, as indicated in the statement of assignments.

5. Organizations and assignments.

The initial organization, as shown without date, is as of April 6, 1917, if already in the service prior to that date, or from date of joining the service if on or after April 6, 1917. In the case of members of the reserve forces, not called to active duty until a later date than that of joining the service, the date of active duty is shown with the first organization.

The date when mustered into Federal service is not ordinarily shown in the individual records of members of the National Guard, indicating mustered along with their respective units. Where mustered into Federal service at different date than their respective units, this is indicated in the statement of organizations and assignments. In the case of members of the Naval Militia, the date when mustered into Federal service is shown with the initial assignment.

Where commissioned upon graduation as a civilian candidate at an officer training camp, the training camp is shown in parentheses before the statement of organizations.

Regiments of the U. S. Army are ordinarily designated merely by numeral and arm of service—e. g., "115th Infantry", "110th Field Artillery", "104th Engineers". For Marine Corps regiments, however, the word is used—e. g., "5th Regiment".

A numeral always precedes the term to which it relates, except where in effect used as a name—e. g., "115 Inf"; but "SP 223" (Navy vessel).

The lesser component part always precedes the major organization—e. g., "Co A 115 Inf", "Med Det 115 Inf".

The arm or branch of the service of which an organization is part is specified only if necessary to identify the organization.

The camp or station is shown only if necessary to identify the organization.

Where the designation of an organization was changed, the two designations are simply used in sequence, without indicating the relationship.

Where the individual was serving directly with the particular organization, no distinction is made herein as to whether regularly assigned or merely attached or on detached service with such organization.

The title of position or duty is not ordinarily shown, but only the organization, station or office to which assigned. This refers, of course, especially to the officer records.

The cards ordinarily do not specify whether at school or training camp as student or as instructor.

The Army cards ordinarily do not show absence from organization as patient in hospital; but, whenever this is shown, it is distinctly indicated by the word "patient", otherwise impliedly on duty assignment at the hospital. The Navy and Marine Corps cards, on the other hand, show hospitals in the statement of organizations and assignments, without specifying whether as patient or on duty assignment, but presumably as patient except in the case of medical and hospital corpsmen and of some supply and other staff personnel.

The official cards ordinarily do not show periods on furlough or leave of absence, except indefinite furlough without pay.

The Army cards ordinarily do not show brief periods of AWOL and AOL. The Navy cards show AWOL and AOL of ten days or longer, so that listed as a deserter, although subsequently held as only AWOL or AOL.

Where in confinement at military or naval prison, this is always distinctly indicated by the word "prisoner", otherwise on duty assignment. "Prisoner" indicates in confinement under sentence, confinement merely awaiting trial ordinarily not being shown.

The assignments shown on the Navy cards are in many cases only the headquarters where the service record was carried, without specifying the particular duty or station—as, for instance, assigned to the station ship U. S. S. Reina Mercedes but on duty ashore at Annapolis, or assigned to the station ship U. S. S. Triton but on duty ashore in Washington, D. C.

6. Termination of service.

The arbitrary date, January 1, 1920, is used herein for terminating the records. The Army, Navy and Marine Corps cards vary greatly in the matter of a terminal date and there is no intrinsic fixed date. The date January 1, 1920, is taken because demobilization of the wartime forces was virtually completed by that date and practically no one was obliged against his own will to remain in the service beyond that date.

The records herein are continued to January 1, 1920, if the data is in hand, where service was actually continuous to that date, although there may have been a discharge and reenlistment or other change of status. The Army cards, however, generally end at discharge, although there may have been immediate reenlistment.

On August 28, 1919, the Coast Guard reverted from its wartime status as a part of the Navy to the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department. The Coast Guard records, therefore, are terminated at August 28, 1919.

In the case of members of the reserve forces, the records herein are terminated upon definitive return to inactive status. Reserve nurses, Army Nurse Corps, when relieved from duty, retained no military status whatsoever.

Unless otherwise indicated, discharge was impliedly in ordinary course upon expiration of enlistment or on demobilization.

The entry "honorable discharge" is used in all cases where the discharge was under honorable conditions, regardless of the particular form of discharge certificate. The entry "discharge", used without qualification, indicates discharge not under honorable conditions, although not a dishonorable discharge. "Inactive" and "relieved" imply under honorable conditions.

In the case of officers, "resigned" implies under honorable conditions, unless distinctly indicated otherwise. "For the good of the service" indicates not under honorable conditions. "Dismissed" is equivalent to a dishonorable discharge.

"Honorable discharge (mark of desertion later removed)" indicates action by the President under authority of the Act of March 4, 1925, whereby, in view of subsequent honorable World War service, a veteran may be relieved of a charge of desertion standing against him on the records and thus regarded as having been honorably discharged on the date of entry of desertion.

7. Overseas service.

This refers to service in the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe or Siberia. The cards generally do not specify the particular country. Transport duty is not entered as "overseas" on the Army cards.

The Army cards show dates of departure from the United States and of arrival in the United States upon return. The Marine Corps cards show dates of arrival overseas and of departure upon return.

The Navy cards do not furnish this item of information as such.

8. Engagements.

The following operations in which organizations of the American Expeditionary Forces participated are designated as major operations:

Cambrai Defensive.....	May 12-Dec. 4, 1917
Somme Defensive	March 21-April 6, 1918
Lys Defensive	April 9-27, 1918
Aisne Defensive	May 27-June 5, 1918
Montdidier-Noyon Defensive	June 9-13, 1918
Champagne-Marne Offensive	July 15-18, 1918
Aisne-Marne Offensive	July 18-Aug. 6, 1918
Somme Offensive.....	Aug. 8-Nov. 11, 1918
Oise-Aisne Offensive	Aug. 18-Nov. 11, 1918
Ypres-Lys Offensive	Aug. 19-Nov. 11, 1918
St Mihiel Offensive.....	Sept. 12-16, 1918
Meuse-Argonne Offensive	Sept. 26-Nov. 11, 1918
Vittorio-Veneto Offensive.....	Oct. 24-Nov. 4, 1918

All of these major operations were in France and Belgium, except Vittorio-Veneto in Italy.

The term "defensive sector" is used to cover participation in engagements or presence within the battle zone not included in any of the major operations. The entire front extending across France and Belgium constituted battle zone. Specific names of sectors are usually given, otherwise parenthetically the names of the old provinces in France, Belgium and Italy, or merely the name of the country for Russia and Siberia.

The engagements are listed in chronological order, but without dates.

Endeavor has been made to harmonize the statements of organizations and of engagements—that is, if the individual is not entitled to credit for engagements of his organization, then to show his periods of absence from his organization, or, if entitled to credit for engagements other than those of his own organization, then to show his detached service on which such credit is based. In some instances, however, presence within the battle zone was simply on mission in the performance of general duties—e. g., from General Headquarters, without specific assignment for the period of service within the battle zone.

The Marine Corps cards record the engagements as part of the American Expeditionary Forces just like the Army cards. The Navy cards similarly show the engagements in the case of members of the Naval Railway Batteries and of other personnel that served with the American Expeditionary Forces.

The official cards generally do not show submarine engagements or other encounters with the sea forces of the enemy. There are shown herein only cases where the vessel was sunk or disabled as the result of enemy action.

9. Wounds.

This refers only to wounds received in action with the enemy, defined as follows: "Wounded by primary or secondary missile, or by gas, set in motion by a hostile act of the enemy, the wound having required treatment by a medical officer". It does not include "shell-shock".

The Army cards generally do not specify the nature of the wound as "gassed", but this is specified on the Marine Corps cards.

Where "died of wounds", the Army cards show date of death, but not date of wound. The Marine Corps cards, however, show date of wound as well as date of death.

10. Prisoner of war.

This, of course, implies in the hands of the enemy.

11. Died in the service.

Killed in action is defined as follows: "Killed in combat with the enemy on the field of battle or died before reaching an aid station or hospital, of wounds inflicted by the enemy." Died of wounds is defined as follows: "Died after having reached an aid station or hospital, as result of wounds received in action against the enemy, of treatment therefor, or of complications resulting therefrom."

Where accident is naturally implied, it is not explicitly stated—e. g., "drowning", "fall from wagon".

Death is impliedly under honorable conditions, unless explicitly stated otherwise. In suicide cases, it is shown affirmatively where "in line of duty"—that is, where held consequent upon service.

12. Decorations and citations.

United States decorations and citations are listed first, in order of grade. In Army and Navy cases, respectively, the awards are impliedly of their own service, unless otherwise specified. In Marine Corps cases, the awards are specified as "Army" or "Navy", if necessary to distinguish.

Foreign awards are listed by countries, alphabetically, and under each country in order of precedence, according to the usage of the particular country. Translations of the titles of decorations are used, except where the foreign form is commonly accepted or where translation is unsatisfactory.

The data in the citations in some cases is at variance with the service records. In such cases, the data in the service records has been carefully checked. The actual citations are of course given, even though the recitals may be inaccurate.

ABBREVIATIONS OF MILITARY AND NAVAL TERMS

This is not a complete list of military and naval abbreviations, but only of terms used in the service records herein. The list conforms generally to the official abbreviations, but with many variations to suit our requirements. Where the abbreviations of different terms are identical, the connotation will indicate the appropriate term.

Abbreviations of military and naval terms are used herein invariably without a period for punctuation, except in the text of citations. A period is always used, however, with abbreviations of the names of States of the United States, thus avoiding any possible confusion. In copying citations, of course, the text is followed in all respects, including punctuation.

A numeral preceding a military or naval term is always denominative, not quantitative—e. g., "1 lt" for first lieutenant (not one lieutenant); "2 Div" for Second Division; "42 Base Hosp" for Base Hospital No. 42; etc.

Wounded slightly 11/3/18
Distinguished Service Cross
Near Crepion, France, Nov. 3, 1918.
While carrying a message from battalion to regimental headquarters, Private Abrams was seriously injured in the lungs and eyes by concentrated mustard gas, but he
ported back to battalion headquarters before seeking medical attention.
French Croix de Guerre (Silver Star)
Displayed magnificent bravery during the combats around Crepion, north of Verdun on November 3, 1918. Although badly gassed, he continued to perform his duty as liaison agent. Would not consent to be treated until after he had delivered the message which he was carrying.

For extraordinary heroism and devotion to duty on the occasion of a fire on the U.S.S. Cleveland at sea, on February 16, 1918. This man, with others, descended into a compartment over the after-magazine, filled with smoke and suffocating fumes, and successfully extinguished the fire after forty-five minutes' work.

Distinguished Service Cross
Near Grand Pre, France, Oct. 11, 1918.

During the advance in the Argonne Forest, and at a time when his forces were fatigued by the stress of battle and a long period of active front-line service, Major General Alexander visited the units in the front line, cheering and encouraging them to greater efforts. Unmindful of the severe fire to which he was subjected, he continued until he had inspected each group, his utter disregard of danger and inspiring example resulting in the crossing of the Aisne and the capture of Grand Pre and St. Juvin.

AEF Meritorious Service Certificate
For services with the 77th Division,
American Expeditionary Forces.
French Legion of Honor (Commander)

No specific citation.
French Croix de Guerre (Palm)
After having remarkably organized the 41st Division which for several months served as the depot division for the entire American army, he displayed, as commanding general of the 77th Division, the highest professional and intellectual qualities which permitted him to take a victorious part in the pursuit between the Vesle and the Aisne and in the Argonne offensive.

French Croix de Guerre (Gilt Star)
A general officer of remarkable bravery who constantly visited the most dangerous points of his line and who by his example has brought the morale of his soldiers up to a very high level.

9 Inf Brig Citation for Gallantry in Action
On September 15th and 16th, 1918, the above named soldiers acting as battalion runners showed marked devotion to duty, while under constant shell fire in the Bois-Bonvaux. Regardless of shells bursting all around them their disregard of self in administering first aid to the wounded and carrying litters to the first aid station when not in the performance of their duty as Battalion runners was highly commented upon by Battalion Commander and enlisted personnel of the Battalion. Their marked excellence in the performance of their duties displayed the high and wonderful morale of the organization.

Distinguished Service Cross
Near Sivry, France, Oct. 18, 1918.
During several engagements in the vicinity of Sivry he upon his own initiative went forward and located enemy machine-gun nests. On another occasion his platoon having lost connection with his company during a heavy enemy artillery fire, he reconnoitered the position and established liaison with his company.

Displayed remarkable courage and devotion to duty October 16, 1918,
at the Battle of Grande Montagne, when, after being gassed, he refused to go to the hospital and remained with his company, taking command of same after all its officers had become casualties.

79 Div Citation for Gallantry in Action
While in action on Hill 373, north of Bois de Consenvoye, Sergt. Baker distinguished himself by his action in command of a platoon and by his admirable control of it when under intense artillery and machine gun fire. By his efficient handling of his platoon and the control of their fire the remainder of the company was able to continue its advance.

On the morning of October 9th, Sgt. Baker commanded a platoon of 'A' Company during the attack on the ridge west of Cornay.
He also commanded the platoon during the attack north of Som-merance on the morning of October 14th. His platoon suffered heavy casualties. Sgt. Baker was wounded while trying to encircle the machine gun which was causing many casualties and holding up the advance. Until he was wounded he kept his men well under his control. His coolness and bravery was an inspiration for the men under him.

Distinguished Service Cross

Near Bois-de-Consenvoye, France,
Oct. 10, 1918.
He went through heavy artillery fire to the side of a wounded comrade who was exposed to the enemy and in a helpless condition.
Taking his wounded comrade with him, he returned to safety, his whole journey being made through an artillery barrage.
French Croix de Guerre (Silver Star)
On October 19, 1918, he displayed great courage and coolness in going through a violent barrage fire to help one of his wounded comrades.

French Croix de Guerre (Palm)

An officer full of dash, a model of courage and energy. Wounded during the operations from July 18-22, 1918, he set his men a fine example of courage in refusing to be evacuated before the end of the attack then in progress. On his return to the front, he again distinguished himself during the offensive of October, 1918, exerting himself to the utmost to accomplish the mission of his battery and displaying the greatest coolness under the most difficult circumstances.

Distinguished Service Cross
Near Moulins, France, July 14-15, 1918.

Seeing his right flank badly exposed to the enemy's advance across the Marne, Lieutenant Barber changed the position of two of his guns to meet this emergency, performing this during terrific enemy fire. He then ran a distance of 150 yards in the open to stop the fire of our infantry on our troops. Going forward to the aid of a wounded soldier, Lieutenant Barber administered first aid and was carrying the man to safety when the latter died. Picking up the one remaining undamaged gun, he opened fire on the enemy, who were crossing the river, sinking one boat, killing many, and causing the others to abandon their boats.

French Legion of Honor (Chevalier)
No specific citation.

French Croix de Guerre (Palm)

Seeing his right flank in danger and notwithstanding violent enemy fire, he changed the position of two machine-guns to save the situation. He then ran into the open to stop the fire of our infantry which had been directed upon our own troops, advancing still further to pick up a wounded soldier in order to carry him to the rear. Later, having found an enemy machine-gun, he sank a boat in which several Germans were attempting to cross the Marne, forcing them to jump into the water.

Distinguished Service Cross
Near Verdun, France, Oct. 12-13, 1918.

After all the battalion runners had become casualties, he volunteered and carried important messages to the rear through violent artillery and machine-gun fire. Next day this officer went through a wood occupied by enemy machine-gun nests and snipers and established liaison with three companies in an advanced position.

French Legion of Honor (Chevalier)
No specific citation.

French Croix de Guerre (Palm)
An officer of admirable courage.
He volunteered to replace runners who had been disabled, and he himself carried various messages under heavy artillery and machine-gun fire.

Distinguished Service Cross
Near Verdun, France, Nov. 5, 1918.
With two other soldiers, he voluntarily left a place of safety, went forward 40 meters under machine-gun fire in plain view of the enemy, and rescued another soldier who had been blinded by a machine-gun bullet, and was helplessly staggering about.

French Croix de Guerre (Gilt Star)
A very brave soldier. Together with two men, he went out in front of the lines, without cover, and under violent machine gun fire, to save one of his comrades who had been blinded by a bullet.

2 Div Citation for Gallantry in Action
The twenty men above named performed their duties as a gun section under peculiarly trying conditions with fidelity and courage of a high degree. Taking up an isolated position in view of the enemy, and unsupported by infantry, they held it under terrific bombardment for twelve hours on June

8, 1918. This near Chateau-Thierry.

Distinguished Service Medal
He led his command, with distinction, in the offensive operations with the British which resulted in the capture of Hamel and Hamel Woods, and in the fighting on the Meuse that gained the villages of Marcheville, St. Hilaire, and a portion of Bois d'Harville. He displayed a high order of leadership in the Argonne-Meuse offensive, when his division attacked and captured the strongly fortified Bois-de-Forges. The successful operations of the division which he trained and commanded in combat were greatly influenced by his energy and abilities as a commander.

British Order of St Michael and St George (Knight Commander)
No specific citation.

French Legion of Honor (Commander)
No specific citation.

French Croix de Guerre (Palm)
He commanded the 33rd Division which after having distinguished itself on the British front in the Somme region, took a brilliant part in the Argonne-Meuse offensive. By virtue of the energy and ability of its chief, this division overcame the enemy's stubborn resistance in capturing the very strongly organized Forges Wood.

 Since October 23, 1917, he has never ceased to display zeal and absolute contempt for danger in going to pick up the wounded at the advanced first-aid stations under the most violent bombardments.

79 Div Citation for Gallantry in Action

This soldier, while 1st Sergeant of Company B, 313th Infantry, in disregard of his personal safety and in the execution of his duty was constantly enroute to and from the front line, carrying messages from his company commander to the platoon commanders directing the action. He exposed himself continuously to fire until he was wounded on September 30th, 1918, when he had gone to the assistance of one of the Company Officers who was wounded in a position under heavy fire at the time, thereby setting an example to the men of his company.

Distinguished Service Cross
At Briecelles, France, Nov. 3-4, 1918.

When the footbridges over the Meuse River were destroyed by artillery fire, Sergeant Bevan volunteered and assisted in repairing the damage under violent machine-gun fire. On the night of November 4, while leading his platoon across the footbridge, part of it was blown away and he fell into the water, but pulling himself out, he continued to lead his men, regardless of the cold and extreme fatigue. Later he exposed himself to the enemy fire while carrying a wounded man to a place of safety.

5 Div Citation for Gallantry in Action

By his coolness and devotion to duty as platoon sergeant during the advance of October 14th-21st, 1918, through terrific barrage of high explosive and machine gun fire near Romagne, France, aided materially in the upkeep of morale and upon consolidation personally supervised and directed the laying of the four machine guns of his platoon with keen foresight toward the protection of the infantry to which his platoon was attached.

French Croix de Guerre (Gilt Star)
A noncommissioned officer of admirable courage who volunteered to repair, under violent machine-gun fire, the footbridges over the Meuse that had been destroyed by the enemy artillery. During the night of November 4, while conducting his platoon over the footbridge he fell in the river and after having been rescued continued to lead his platoon in spite of the cold and his extreme fatigue.

For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished service. As Assistant Paymaster of the U.S. Marine Corps in France, he performed arduous and complex duties, many of which were outside the normal sphere of the Paymaster's Department. With untiring zeal and unlimited patience he worked unceasingly, under the most trying circumstances, to relieve combatant units of a mass of clerical and administrative detail. His ability and tireless devotion to duty added much to the morale of the personnel serving under him, and, as a direct result of this, in no small degree to the morale of the combatant forces of the Corps in France.

AEF Meritorious Service Certificate
For services with 1st Replacement peditionary Forces.

Displayed remarkable courage and devotion to duty, October 10-11, 1918, in the Bois de Consenvoye, when, under heavy enemy fire, he rendered first aid and helped evacuate the wounded, and continued his humane work for forty-eight hours without rest or sleep.

3 Div Citation for Gallantry in Action

Rendered valuable services as liaison officer in the Marne battle, July 15th, 1918. Occupying an exposed post he continued to send important messages, thereby making it possible for the artillery to direct its fire most advantageously.
3 FA Brig Citation for Gallantry in

42 Div Citation for Gallantry in Action

On the occasion of an enemy raid on our trenches on the morning of March 5, 1918, when he directed the fire of his piece until all ammunition on hand was exhausted and then led his men through the barrage along a communicating trench, a distance of at least fifty meters, where he reported to the French Commander and continued with his squad to carry ammunition for the French during the remainder of the engagement.

 War Dept Citation for Gallantry in Action

On March 9, 1918, near the village Negre, France, near the Sail-lant du Boheme, while a member of a crew operating a trench mortar. An enemy shell having killed the layer of the piece and wounded the corporal in charge, Private Block with another private of his battery entered the battery en-placement without knowledge that the Bickford fuse had been prepared for the instantaneous discharge of the mortar. Discovering the lighted fuse, Private Block leaped across the gun, extracted and extinguished the fuse, thus saving the lives of the wounded corporal and the private who had accompanied him, as they were directly in front of the bomb.

French Croix de Guerre (Silver Star)

An enemy shell having caused losses in the personnel of his gun crew, and despite the heavy shelling, he extinguished the burning fuse which would have set off the shell in his gun. Thanks to his courage and presence of mind, he saved the life of a comrade who was leaning on the gun to pick up one of the victims of enemy fire.

82 Div Citation for Gallantry in Action
On the morning of October 14, 1918, near Sommerance, France, after all the sergeants of his platoon had become casualties, Corporal Bonsall displayed great brava-ry and devotion to duty by assuming command of the platoon and continuing the advance on October 14, 1918. He retained command of his platoon until his company was relieved on November 1, 1918.

9 Inf Brig Citation for Gallantry in Action

By their meritorious service and devotion to duty these men rendered invaluable service to their organization. They drove their wagons, loaded with rations, supplies, and ammunition, to the front from the Division Dumps during the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne

Offensives, frequently under severe shell fire and aeroplanes bombing.

Due to their untiring efforts and great devotion to duty sufficient food, supplies, and ammunition for any emergency were at the front

in Action
During the Meuse-Argonne Offensive Pvt. 1cl. Boyer was for twenty-four days and nights on duty with his company. Although suffering from the results of gas and severe exposure he remained with his platoon showing marked devotion to duty. During the advance his coolness under heavy machine gun and artillery fire was a source of inspiration to his comrades.

Near Verdun, France, Oct. 8, 1918.
During an offensive of his organization on the edge of Consenvoye Wood he led a flanking attack on the enemy, and by skillful handling of his platoon captured two machine guns and opened a way for an advance which resulted in clearing the wood of the enemy and greatly assisted in obtaining our objective. Later he was severely wounded while leading a wire-carrying party through a heavy artillery barrage, refusing first aid until a soldier wounded at the same time had been attended to.

In the Bois Dommartin, northwest of Thiaucourt, France, Oct. 11, 1918.
He voluntarily and alone made a reconnaissance of the Bois Dommartin, a strongly fortified enemy position, and returned with valuable information. Later, accompanied by another soldier, he again made a reconnaissance, and while returning with valuable information was attacked by a superior enemy force and killed.
